How to use the book.

The book is made for someone who is interested in the Nintendo Entertainment System as a collector or just a gamer.

I have tried to make the book well presented and easy to look through. Although the spelling errors are numerous, try to look past it and don't get to hung up on them.

I suck at grammar, i know:(

The main portions of the book consists of, in order:

Information about collecting.

Nintendo Entertainment System

This is a short wikipedia introduction for the Nintendo Entertainment System.

Following a series of arcade game successes in the early 1980s, Nintendo made plans to create a cartridge-based console called the Famicom. Masayuki Uemura designed the system. Original plans called for an advanced 16-bit system which would function as a full-fledged computer with a keyboard and floppy disk drive, but Nintendo president Hiroshi Yamauchi rejected this and instead decided to go for a cheaper, more conventional cartridge-based game console as he felt that features such as keyboards and disks were intimidating to non-technophiles. A test model was constructed in October 1982 to verify the functionality of the hardware, after which work began on programming tools. Because 65xx CPUs had not been manufactured or sold in Japan up to that time, no cross-development software was available and it had to be produced from scratch. Early Famicom games were written on a system that ran on an NEC PC-8001 computer and LEDs on a grid were used with a digitizer to design graphics as no software design tools for this purpose existed at that time.

The code name for the project was “GameCom”, but Masayuki Uemura’s wife proposed the name “Famicom”, arguing that “In Japan, ‘pasokon’ is used to mean a personal computer, but it is neither a home or personal computer. Perhaps we could say it is a family computer.” Meanwhile, Hiroshi Yamauchi decided that the console should use a red and white theme after seeing a billboard for DX Antenna which used those colors.

Original plans called for the Famicom’s cartridges to be the size of a cassette tape, but ultimately they ended up being twice as big. Careful design attention was paid to the cartridge connectors since loose and faulty connections often plagued arcade machines. As it necessitated taking 60 connection lines for the memory and expansion, Nintendo decided to produce their own connectors in-house rather than use ones from an outside supplier.

Uemura added an eject lever to the cartridge slot which was not really necessary, but he felt that children could be entertained by pressing it. He also added a microphone to the second controller with the idea that it could be used to make players’ voices sound through the TV speaker.

The Famicom was slow to gather momentum; a bad chip set caused the initial release of the system to crash. Following a product recall and a reissue with a new motherboard, the Famicom’s popularity soared, becoming the best-selling game console in Japan by the end of 1984.

Encouraged by these successes, Nintendo soon turned its attention to the North American market. Nintendo entered into negotiations with Atari to release the Famicom under Atari’s name as the name Nintendo Advanced Video Gaming System. The deal was set to be finalized and signed at the Summer Consumer Electronics Show in June 1983. However, Atari discovered at that show that its competitor Coleco was illegally demonstrating its Coleco Adam computer with Nintendo’s Donkey Kong game. This violation of Atari’s exclusive license with Nintendo to publish the game for its own computer systems delayed the implementation of Nintendo’s game console marketing contract with Atari. Atari’s CEO Ray Kassar was fired the next month, so the deal went nowhere, and Nintendo decided to market its system on its own.

Subsequent plans to market a Famicom console in North America featuring a keyboard, cassette data recorder, wireless joystick controller and a special BASIC cartridge under the name “Nintendo Advanced Video System” likewise never materialized. By the beginning of 1985, the Famicom had sold more than 2.5 million units in Japan and Nintendo soon announced plans to release it in North America as the Advanced Video Entertainment System that same year. The American video game press was skeptical that the console could have any success in the region, with the March 1985 issue of Electronic Games magazine stating that “the videogame market in America has virtually disappeared” and that “this could be a miscalculation on Nintendo’s part.”

At June 1985's Consumer Electronics Show, Nintendo unveiled the American version of its Famicom. This is the system which would eventually be officially deployed as the Nintendo Entertainment System, or the colloquial "NES". Nintendo seeded these first systems to limited American test markets starting in New York City on October 18, 1985, following up with a full-fledged North American release of the console in February of the following year. Nintendo released 18 launch titles. Some varieties of these launch games contained Famicom chips with an adapter inside the cartridge so they would play on North American consoles, which is why the title screen of "Gyromite" has the Famicom title "Robot Gyro" and the title screen of "Stack-Up" has the Famicom title "Robot Block".

The system's launch represented not only a new product, but also a reframing of the severely damaged home video game market segment as a whole. The video game market crash of 1983 had occurred in significant part due to a lack of consumer and retailer confidence in video games, which had in turn been due partially to confusion and misrepresentation in the marketing of video games. Prior to the NES, the packaging of many video games presented bombastic artwork which exaggerated the graphics of the actual game. In terms of product identity, a single game such as Pac-Man would appear in many versions on many different game consoles and computers, with large variations in graphics, sound, and general quality between the versions. By stark contrast, Nintendo's marketing strategy aimed to regain consumer and retailer confidence, by delivering a singular platform whose technology was not in need of heavy exaggeration and whose qualities were clearly defined.

To differentiate Nintendo's new home platform from the early 1980s' common perception of a beleaguered and frivolous video game market, the company freshened its product nomenclature and positioning, and it established a rigorous product approval and licensing policy. The overall system was referred to as an "Entertainment System" instead of a "video game system", which was centered upon a machine called a "Control Deck" instead of a "console", and which featured software cartridges called "Game Paks" instead of "video games". The 10NES lockout chip system acted as a lock-and-key coupling of each Game Pak and Control Deck, deterring the copying or production of NES games which had not first achieved Nintendo's licensed approval. The packaging of the launch lineup of NES games bore pictures of a very close representation of the actual onscreen graphics of the game, which were of sufficiently recognizable quality on their own. Symbols on the launch games' packaging clearly indicated the genre of the game, in order to reduce consumer confusion. A 'seal of quality' was printed on all appropriately licensed game and accessory packaging. The initial seal stated, "This seal is your assurance that Nintendo has approved and guaranteed the quality of this product". This text was later changed to "Official Nintendo Seal of Quality".

Unlike with the Famicom, Nintendo of America marketed the console primarily to children, instituting a rather strict policy of censoring profanity, sexual, religious, or political content in games. The most famous case of this was Lucasfilm's attempts to port Maniac Mansion (a game with a considerable amount of unacceptable material) to the NES. NOA continued their censorship policy until 1994 with the advent of the Entertainment Software Rating Board system.

The best-selling gaming console of its time, the NES helped revitalize the US video game industry following the video game crash of 1983. With the NES, Nintendo introduced a now-standard business model of licensing third-party developers, authorizing them to produce and distribute titles for Nintendo's platform.

In 2009, the Nintendo Entertainment System was named the single greatest video game console in history by IGN, out of a field of 25. It was the second greatest console behind only the Sega Dreamcast in PC magazines "Top 10 video game consoles of all time".

Beginners Guide to Start a Collection.

"<http://www.squidoo.com/beginners-guide-to-collecting-nintendo-nes-games>"

A good way to start a NES collection is buying in bulk. Later you can make personal milestones for yourself.

Region codes.

But first you need to decide what region code you want to collect.

Do you want your own region games, games that was realeased in your country? If you live abroad from the US, the NES games are often more expensive. As for example in the scandinavian countries the games are somethimes three times more expensive than in the US. But the library is much smaller in these contries as well.

Childhood memories

Do you only want to collect the games you played and grew up with?

This is also a good starting point as many collectors start with the games they knew and played growing up.

Complete or loose

Do you want the games complete or loose? This is an important factor, for if you start with a bunch of loose and later decide to start collecting boxed, the box and manual are often as expensive or more than the game itself. So, it's best to buy the game complete, than starting to fill in the missing items of the games your already own.

Unlicenced games

Do you want to collect the unlicenced games? This can be a very fun, but sometimes an expensive task.

Pictures from the region code on the back of a NES.

PAL A and PAL B NES boxes.

NES hardware.

Do you want to collect NES hardware? Something i want to start collect-ing. It looks like alot of fun. You should have alot of space if you want to start a collection of NES hardware.

5 screw.

When Nintendo started making games and sold the first wave of licenses to 3rd party companies, the gray carts themselves had 5 screws and a flat top. After a year, they found a more efficient way to make the games, and easier to get into with the notches on the top. So the original 5 screw carts are often much rarer, some of them significantly so.

Personal Milestones.

Personal milestones are a great and fun way to get a feeling of completion when you are collecting. A milestone can be e.g.:

- All the Capcom, konami games.
- All the small boxes, early black label games.
- All games featuring Mario
- All games from a specific year.

Or just collecting a set of number. Like 222 games or somethig, i don't know. Find your a personal milestone that works for you.

Factory sealed.

Collecting sealed games has become big in the collector scene. Often people buy the games they like sealed because of sentimental value, but get bit by the collection bug and soon sit with a big collection on their hands. Other collectors may buy sealed games because of the skyrocketing value and hope to get a profit. But whatever the motives are, sealed games collecting are a dangerous and difficult task for the uninformed person. Many people are trying to take advantage of others, and will do their best to trick them.

Before you start buying sealed games, you should do a little homework on the stuff. Join a forum read some facts and get a little educated. The guide that follows, made from the nice ebay seller skcin08 does a good job of explaining many of the dangerous tell-tale of sealed collecting.

“by: skcin08@ebay.com”

This guide will explain some methods to detect if a NES game is factory sealed or has been resealed. Games for other systems (Sega, Sony, other Nintendo systems) were sealed in all sorts of various ways, so please keep in mind this guide is for NES only.

As many as 95% of NES games have a seam in the shrinkwrap that runs horizontally across the back of the box. The seam is often called the “H seam” or “Horizontal seam”. This seam ALWAYS starts exactly half-way down the box. A box is 7 inches (17.8 cm) high, so the seam should start 3.5 inches (8.9 cm) down both sides of the box. If a game is missing this horizontal seam, it is not necessarily resealed. Many games released by LJN/Acclaim were sealed with a vertical overlapping seam. The licensed versions of Pac-Man and Ms. Pac-Man released by Namco do not have any seam on the back. In addition, all unlicensed games were sealed in various different ways. If you have a licensed game that does not feature this horizontal seam, it could be resealed.

Recently, resealers have started faking this seam, though it is hard to make a convincing fake. Check the spot where the “H seam” comes perpendicular with the vertical part of the seam. If the game is a legitimate factory seal, the seam usually slightly bends to the side and slightly overlaps itself. If the game has been resealed, chances are it was resealed with cheap equipment and will just come straight down making a perfect 90 degree angle. The horizontal seam on the Burgertime meets perpendicular with the vertical part making a 90 degree angle, because it has been resealed. However, on the Dr. Chaos below, the shrinkwrap slightly overlaps itself, because this game is a legitimately factory sealed.

The only way to tell for sure if a game has been resealed with 100% accuracy, is to check the “hinge” part of the top flap. As soon as the top flap has been opened for the first time, a white line will form at the hinge area, which is especially easy to notice on darker boxed games. This white line is difficult to see in white boxed games such as Anticipation, but for a darker boxed game such as Dragon Warrior IV, it is especially easy to notice. When the top flap opens and closes, wear and tear will start to accumulate around the hinge area. The more often a game box is opened and closed, the more wear and tear will start to accumulate around the hinge area. Sometimes resealers will take magic marker and color over the white line, making it harder to notice. Be sure to check closely under a bright light to look for slight discolorations and wear to make sure the white line hasn't been colored over. The picture of 1942 has wear around the hinges on the top flap and is a reseat.

Check the hang tab. The hangtab used to hang most NES games is a “D” style hang tab, measuring 2 inches wide and 1.75 inches high. Often times the part of the hang tab that is stuck to the shrink wrap is slightly discolored, yet oddly enough, the rest of the tab is usually still clear. This is because of the type of the plastic used and the age. If a game has a hang tab with these properties, it is likely legit. Sometimes the hang tabs fell off the games, or in some cases retailers applied their own different style hang tab, so it is important to know that the absence of a hang tab or a different style tab does not mean the game is a reseal.

If the game is resealed the seller may know that it has been resealed, but don’t send him rude emails because he may not know they are resealed either. Often times, if a retailer in the early 90s had a game returned to them, they would simply reseal it and sell them as new. This is called a “vintage reseal”, and sometimes people resort to eBay simply to sell their old store stock and do not know their games are resealed. Always look out for the phrase “factory sealed”. Some dishonest sellers will simply say “sealed” in which case they would not be lying. Furthermore, sometimes if a seller is knowingly selling reseals, he will purposely post low-quality photos, or photos of weird angles of the game, so that you can’t easily tell that it’s been resealed. If you have any doubts, email the seller first. Their response usually says a lot about their credibility and character. If they give you a bad vibe, it is best to proceed with caution or stay away entirely.

Price tags. Some legitimate factory sealed games have price tags on them, but resealers sometimes will add their own price tags onto the shrinkwrap. If the price tag looks old and discolored due to age, chances are it is a legit factory sealed game. Also, where is the price tag from? Generic white price guns can be purchased on eBay for around $15 shipped, but price tags from major retailers are not easy, and generally not worth the time, to reproduce. If a game has a price tag from a major retailer such as Toys R Us, Wal-Mart, K-Mart, etc., it is likely factory sealed.

Check the seller’s feedback. Do they seem honest and legitimate? If they have 100s of positive feedback, they are likely not pulling a scam, but don’t let that mislead you. If they have any negative feedbacks, check them. If a negative feedback says something about resealing games, you should proceed with caution or not proceed at all. I hope this is common sense.

If you have received a game that is a reseal, email the seller immediately and request a refund. Once again, the sellers response will say a lot about his character. If he will not allow you a refund, you can file a dispute with Paypal (if you paid with Paypal) as long as you file it within 45 days of the paypal payment. You will be required to send the item back and you will be responsible for return shipping charges. Make sure you purchase Delivery Confirmation to prove that you sent the item back, or Signature Confirmation if the original Paypal payment was $250 or more. I would not recommend leaving negative feedback unless the seller gives you a hard time and you are fairly certain he knew it was resealed when he sold it.

One last thing I’d like to say is simply to use common sense. If something seems suspicious, proceed with caution. Don’t be afraid to bombard the seller with questions and request more photographs if unsure about the ones provided. Be smart about what you purchase.

If you want to start a sealed collection or just curious, you should join one or both of these forums. They look like they have their shit together.

sealedgameheaven.com

The forum has game sale & trade boards, a sealed game databases from every console with information on seal types, styles & variants for both NTSC and PAL. Confirmation & evidence in relation to factory seals & reseals and what a game is worth.

sealedvideogames.net

The web-site has a blog about sealed videogames with rare and obscure listing posted all the time. A forum with community of many experienced collectors, sealed guides for every system for newbie collector to read, learn and discuss and an extensive database of sealed prices, based on confirmed actual sales.

Prototypes.

A prototype is a version of a game from its development phase (typically an alpha or beta version) which was typically not meant to be released.

Contrary to common internet belief, prototypes are often not a “beta”; beta versions are when the game is mostly complete, but is lacking the finishing polish (unfixed bugs or glitches, unpolished translation, etc.). In this way, most prototypes released are alpha or pre-alpha versions, when the game is still under active development and several features are not finalized.

Prototypes usually end up on the internet by game testers, reviewers, or developers either directly by using a backup device, or indirectly by giving such test cartridges to friends where they eventually end up on eBay or simply dumped online. In some rare instances, prototypes end up being sold by pirates who mask it as the final version.

Prototypes are very interesting because they often feature lots of content that was changed or removed in the final version without any trace. In many cases, they also feature debug modes of some kind.

“tcrf.net”

Games and equipment may become collectible by virtue of its unavailability. This includes games available only in prototype form, which may have left the company because of liquidation, theft, journalistic review, or other cause. Games that were not released to the public are still of interest to the gaming community, as their software can be copied and distributed over the Internet. Prototypes tend to decrease in value when their ROM is released publicly. Because these titles are not supposed to leave their respective companies, they can also be considered black market collectibles.

Like sealed games, collecting prototypes can be a challenge, as people are making fakes to sell. It is possible to An EPROMs programmer and burn another game rom onto a regular cart, messing with the cart label and selling it as a prototype without much hassle.

by: “nintendoplayer.com”

The plastic Nintendo cartridges act like protective shells for the circuit boards inside. These circuit boards are called PCBs (Printed Circuit Boards). The data found inside of the majority of prototype carts is stored on memory chips on the PCB called EPROMs. “EPROM” stands for Erasable Programmable Read Only Memory.

Game data found inside of nearly all regular, officially licensed Nintendo carts is stored not on EPROMs, but rather on memory chips on the PCB called Mask ROMs (or MROMs). “MROM” stands for Mask Read Only Memory.

Unlike permanent MROMs, EPROMs were never meant to last for a very long time. They were temporary solutions for testing games or flashing them quickly to ship them out to gaming publications for previews and reviews before the mass-produced carts were manufactured. To prevent the game data from erasing, EPROMs on prototypes are often covered with an adhesive sticker to help block out UV light.

A sure way of visually differentiating an EPROM from an MROM is by seeing if there is a small square in the middle of the chip like the one on the right. This is called an EPROM window, and it’s made of quartz crystal that makes it reflective like a hologram. Exposing this window over time to a certain amount of UV light will gradually erase the game data stored on an EPROM.

EPROMs can also be erased over several years without any direct exposure to UV light. Just how long it takes for the data to erase under normal temperate conditions, without sunlight or other UV light to progress the erasure, is unsure. The slow erasing of data without exposing the EPROM to UV light is what is known as bit rot.

EPROMs are not unique to prototypes alone; they can be found on some other games, as well. Several pirated and unlicensed games, like all three of the Panesian pornographic titles, use EPROMs. (This means that, one day, Panesian collectors will be left with nothing but their own self shame.)

Test carts are examples of official, non-prototype Nintendo games using EPROMs. These were cartridges given to Nintendo Service Centers to help diagnose console and accessory problems.

In rare cases, there have even been reports of EPROMs being spotted in some officially licensed and released Nintendo carts.

Nintendo compiled a list of all officially licensed NES titles, complete with release dates. Many prototypes are dated either on the label or on the inside. The further away the date is on the prototype from the release, the better your chances are of finding differences. Prototypes dated a month or two before release are most likely review copies sent to gaming publications and will be close to (if not identical) to the released game (although there could be a debug menu, invincibility, or level select capabilities).

For the online market pricing of released game prototypes, those for the NES usually cost more than any other system. For prototypes of terrible games (i.e. Total Recall terrible), the price may be as low as $50. Prototypes of average, run-of-the-mill games generally go for between $75-$150. For prototypes of more popular or rarer games, prices vary at $150-$250+. Major first party Nintendo games can reach prices much higher. Like one of the the Legend of Zelda prototype, that came in a shock yellow game cart. According to the internet, the prototype sold on ebay for $55,000.

Official Nintendo TKEPROM
Prototype Board with Official
Nintendo Prototype Stickers

Seeing an NES-TKEPROM board is very good confirmation of a prototype's authenticity as these type of boards are found only in prototypes. The majority of prototypes have one or two EPROMs (or sometimes more like, for example, one known prototype of The Legend of Zelda). These EPROMs require a special EPROM board for them to work. You cannot use EPROMs on a regular production board (at least, not without additional modification).

You would be hard pressed to find any more proof of legitimacy than with an official Nintendo prototype label on a cartridge holding an official Nintendo prototype board with official Nintendo prototype EPROM stickers inside.

Another common standard prototype label you might see is one that's white (or discolored yellow by age) and reads "USA VERSION (FINAL/NTSC)" on the front label.

NES-TKEPROM boards are not the only official Nintendo prototype PCBs. NES-UNEPROM PCB is another board found only in prototypes and is also a good way of authenticating a prototype.

Prototypes in the NTSC format are most sought after, while those in the PAL format generally do not go for as much money. Reasons may be that most prototype collectors are located in the US and that NES games were sometimes released in North America months (or even years) in advance of the European release, thereby making differences in PAL format prototypes from the final games harder to come by.

Prototypes will often have their cartridges cut out so you can see the PCBs inside. This was done mostly for EPROMs that were socketed because the use of sockets can raise them up, making it difficult to close the cartridge. (Also, the cutting away of plastic allowed developers easy access to the EPROMs inside instead of having to unscrew the cart every time from the back.)

Not all prototypes use special prototype boards like NES-TKEPROM or NES-UNEPROM. In some examples, prototypes can come on regular PCBs without any modifications and without any EPROMs (this includes prototypes of both released and unreleased games). This kind is the most problematic to try to authenticate because when you compare, say, the prototype PCB of a prototype with a copy of the same released PCB game, there's really no visual difference between the two.

Many prototypes have company-specific labels, here is a list of some examples to be on the look out for:

- Acclaim
Return To: Prototype
- Activision
Prototype
- Capcom
Pre-Release
Prototype (Back Label)
Prototype (Front Label)
- Hudson Soft

- LJN

- SUNSOFT

- Taito

- Tengen
Unreleased Prototype (1)
Unreleased Prototype (2)
- Ultra/Konami

The biggest problem about collecting prototypes however, beyond the possibilities of fakes, are bit rot. It is real and something to certainly be concerned about. EPROMs are said to have a guaranteed minimum of ten years life. That's a given. The survival rate after that can range from another ten to fifteen years and even longer. The problem is you'll never know until bit rot occurs. There are no warning signs.

Where do I get games?

- Ask your friends and co-workers if they still have old games lying around (some will even give them to you for free)
- Hunt around at garage sales and flea markets (don't be afraid to try and talk people down in price)
- Visit your local Goodwill
- Go digging through relatives attics and basements (with permission) The hunt is always fun and your bound to find something
- Use forums.

Collecting NES games on for beginners

by: "unknown@ebay.com"

Collecting Nintendo Entertainment System games seems to be quite popular on ebay, whether it be from the nostalgia of their days of a children, or the value of such mere carts. At any given time, it is pretty easy to find the games you want, however, there are trends you must watch and tips on how to find deals and when to not bid. The first thing you must know is when to buy a game, and when not to buy a game as well as what games to buy. The first tip you need to know is to effectively utilize the "search title and description" feature, as it could save you tons of money.

The first tip when starting your collection is BUY IN LOTS. Although the initial investment will be high, you will be saving money in the long term. Would you rather buy 100 games all at once for $200 with $30 or so shipping, or would you rather pick out 100 titles one-by-one paying an average of $3 to $4 per game and $6 to $7 per game afterwards? not to mention the hassle of dealing with hundreds of sellers rather than one?

When the average ebayer is looking for a game, he or she only searches the title feature, but the key is to use "search title and description". Often there will be times where the seller of the games won't know what he has, or has failed to properly research their value and they will just clump a good game in a pile of bad games without thinking anything of it.

Another tip is to search for misspellings of game titles - although rare, it could be possible a valuable game could slip through the cracks this way.

Example: typing "Flinstones" in the search title and description instead of "Flintstones", or "Casltevania" instead of "Castlevania" or "six" instead of "6"

Sometimes there are "spikes" in a game price that you should avoid.

Example: Flintstones II: Surprise at Dinosaur Peak gets overbid, and the price soars to $150 when it normally costs $100. You should wait a few days to see how many other copies are placed on ebay within the next two weeks, because people are more tempted to sell their item when they can get the most out of it. The best bet is to check "Completed" auctions to see what the normal price over the last 30 days for the game is, however, some games only come on ebay once or twice every few months, and the earliest to get them is the best time.

Examples: Panesian's Bubble Bath Babes, Bandai's Stadium Events, Myriad 6-in-1

Collecting is a slow, painful process that doesn't just happen in one day..or even one year (unless, of course, you're bill gates) so the key point is the be patient.

NES REGION CODES

Nintendo was the first console maker to introduce regional locks to its consoles. Games for the Nintendo Entertainment System were locked through both physical and technical means. The NES also contained the 10NES authentication chip; the chip was coded for one of three regions:

- NTSC (North America)
- PAL-A (United Kingdom and Italy)
- PAL-B (other European countries)

A game's region is recognized by the console using the 10NES chip. If the chip inside the cartridge conflicts with the chip inside the console, the game will not boot. The 10NES chip also doubled as a form of DRM to prevent unlicensed or bootleg games to play on the NES.

Compatibility

The chip-id's for the 10NES and the compability are as followed:

NTSC (3193 / 3193A)

- US = USA
- CAN = Canada

PAL-A (3197A)

- UKV = United Kingdom
- GBR = Great Britain (many found in Australia)
- ITA = Italy
- AUS = Australia

PAL-B (3195A)

- EEC = Europe (European Economic Community)
- NOE = Germany (Nintendo of Europe)
- NOE/FRG = Germany (with German text)
- FRG/FRG = Germany (with German text)
- FRG = Germany, Spain and Switzerland
- SCN = Scandinavia
- GPS = Europe (Game Pak Software)
- SWE/SWE = Scandinavia (with swedish text)
- ESP = Spain
- FRA = France, Netherlands & Belgium
- FRA/FRA = France & Belgium (French text)
- HOL = Netherlands and Belgium
- FAH = France & Holland
- DAS = Spain, Germany & English
- KOR = Korea

ASIAN (3196A)

- HKG = Hong Kong
- ASI = Asian

Corporations

Nintendo Co., Ltd. is a Japanese multinational consumer electronics company. Nintendo is the world's largest video game company by revenue. Nintendo originally produced handmade hanafuda cards. By 1963, the company had tried several small niche businesses, such as cab services and love hotels.

Abandoning previous ventures, Nintendo developed into a video game company, becoming one of the most influential in the industry and Japan's third most valuable listed company with a market value of over US$85 billion. As of December 31, 2013, Nintendo has sold over 669.36 million hardware units and 4.20 billion software units.

Nintendo of America is also the majority owner of the Seattle Mariners Major League Baseball team.

The name Nintendo can be roughly translated from Japanese to English as "leave luck to heaven."

The Nintendo Entertainment System home video game console was launched in 1983 in Japan as Family Computer (abbreviated Famicom in Japan and NES in the rest of the world) alongside ports of its most popular arcade titles. In 1985, the NES launched in North America, and was accompanied by Super Mario Bros., one of the best-selling video games of all time.

R&D1 was Nintendo's oldest development team. Its creation coincided with Nintendo's entry into the video games industry, and the original R&D1 was headed by Gunpei Yokoi. The developer has created several notable Nintendo series such as Metroid, Ice Climber, Kid Icarus, and Wario Land.

Nintendo R&D1 established a close relationship with hardware developer Intelligent Systems, and initially worked together on a couple of projects. There was previous misconception that Nintendo R&D1 members left to work at Intelligent Systems, but that is false. The development team has gradually been reduced with a couple of senior members retiring or joining other Nintendo affiliated companies like Creatures, most notably Hirokazu Tanaka and Hirofumi Matsuoka.

R&D1 developed the hugely successful Game Boy line, which was released in 1989. They developed some of the line's most popular games, such as Super Mario Land, and created the character of Wario.

Team Shikamaru was a small club within Nintendo R&D1 that was composed of Makoto Kano, Yoshio Sakamoto, and Toru Osawa. The group was responsible for designing characters and coming up with scripts for several games including Metroid, Kid Icarus, Famicom Tantei Club: Kieta Kōkeisha, Trade & Battle: Card Hero, and several others.

R&D2 was a team within Nintendo that developed software and peripherals. R&D2 ported several of the Nintendo R&D1 and Nintendo R&D3 games over to the Famicom in the early 1980s. While usually occupied in system operating software and technical support, the team would come back to early development in the 1990s where several new designers got their start at game development, the most famous being Eiji Aonuma who developed Marvelous: Treasure Island.

R&D2 was originally led by Masayuki Uemura, who previously worked for Sharp Corporation, using an idea of Sharp's solar technology Uemura's department went on to develop the popular Nintendo beam gun games, selling over 1 million units. Kazuhiko Taniguchi took Uemura's position in 2004. Nintendo R&D2 was later merged into Nintendo SPD.

Nintendo R&D3 was founded in the 1980s, with Genyo Takeda as the general manager. R&D3 was the smallest of the three, but that didn't stop them from helping Nintendo on larger projects, as well as developing games targeted more to a Western audience such as NES sports games and Punch-Out!!. Their last game developed was Pilotwings 64. In 2000, they were renamed Nintendo Integrated Research & Development, and all software designers and programmers were moved to Nintendo EAD.

Absolute Entertainment was an American video game publishing company. Through its development house, Imagineering, Absolute Entertainment produced titles for the Amiga, Atari, Sega Mega Drive and NES among others, as well as for the PC.

Absolute Entertainment

Successor	Skyworks Technologies
Founded	1986
Founder	Garry Kitchen
Defunct	1995
Headquarter	Upper Saddle River, New Jersey, United States

After leaving his position as a video game developer and designer at Activision, Garry Kitchen founded the company in 1986 with his brother Dan Kitchen, along with David Crane, Alex Demeo, John Van Ryzin. The company's headquarters was in Glen Rock, New Jersey, but later moved to another New Jersey borough, Upper Saddle River. While the company was based in New Jersey, David Crane worked out of his home on the West Coast. The company's name was chosen because it was alphabetically above Activision, implying that Absolute Entertainment was superior to Activision. It was the same strategy that Activision chose when the programmers left Atari.

At Absolute Entertainment, Kitchen continued developing games for the Atari 2600 and Atari 7800, as he had done at Activision. However, the Nintendo Entertainment System had already displaced Atari's dominance of the video game console market. Kitchen swiftly shifted his focus to the NES, and produced several landmark titles for the platform, beginning with A Boy and His Blob: Trouble on Blobolonia in 1989, and Battle Tank in 1990. Absolute Entertainment published at least 30 titles before dwindling sales from diminishing product quality prompted Kitchen to shutter the company in 1995. Since Kitchen had already formed a new company with David Crane called Skyworks Technologies, some of the employees transitioned to the new company.

Acclaim Entertainment was an American video game developer and publisher. It developed, published, marketed and distributed interactive entertainment software for a variety of hardware platforms.

The name of the company was picked because it had to be alphabetically above the co-founder's former place of employment, Activision, and also had to be alphabetically above Accolade (another company formed by ex-Activision employees). This was a common formula for picking names of new companies that were founded by ex-Activision employees (the founders of Activision used this formula when they left Atari).

After Acclaim Entertainment's 2004 demise, the Acclaim brand and logotype were purchased by the unrelated company Acclaim Games (defunct from August 26, 2010). Canadian video game publisher Throwback Entertainment acquired more than 150 titles from Acclaim's video game library. In July 2010, We Go Interactive Co., Ltd., based in Seoul, Korea, purchased all IP related with Re-Volt, RC Revenge Pro, RC De GO from Throwback Entertainment.

During Acclaim's decline towards bankruptcy, an executive Steve Perry, made several controversial business and marketing decisions. One example was a promise that a USD $10,000 (£5000) prize would be awarded to UK parents who would name their baby "Turok", to promote the release of Turok: Evolution. Another was an attempt to buy advertising space on actual tombstones for a Shadowman game.

Activision Publishing, Inc. is an American video game publisher. It was the world's first independent developer and distributor of video games for gaming consoles. Its first products were cartridges for the Atari 2600 video console system published from July 1980 for the US market.

Before Activision, third-party developers did not exist. Software for video game consoles were published exclusively by makers of the systems for which the games were designed. For example, Atari was the only publisher of games for the Atari 2600. This was particularly galling to the developers of the games, as they received no financial rewards for games that sold well, and did not receive credit for their games.

Atari programmers David Crane, Larry Kaplan, Alan Miller, and Bob Whitehead met with Atari CEO Ray Kassar in May 1979 to demand that the company treat developers as record labels treated musicians, with royalties and their names on game boxes. Kaplan, who called the others “the best designers for the [2600] in the world”, recalled that Kassar called the four men “towel designers” and that “anyone can do a cartridge.” Crane, Miller, and Whitehead left Atari and founded Activision in October 1979 with former music industry executive Jim Levy and venture capitalist Richard Muchmore; Kaplan soon joined the company. The name “Activision” was decided upon so that the company would appear before Atari in the phone book.

In December 2007, it was announced that Activision would merge with Vivendi Games, which owned fellow games developer and publisher Blizzard, and the merger would close in July 2008. The new company was called Activision Blizzard and is headed by Activision's former CEO, Robert Kotick. The new company is estimated to be worth US$18.9 billion, ahead of Electronic Arts, which is valued at US$14.1 billion.

Atlus U.S.A., Inc. established in 1991, is the American subsidiary of Japanese video game publisher Atlus. Atlus USA publishes games created by Atlus as well as by other developers. Atlus USA is strictly a publisher, often localizing obscure or niche titles from other Japanese developers.

Many of the Megami Tensei games have not been released in North America. Jack Bros. for the Virtual Boy, Revelations: Persona for the PlayStation, and Revelations: The Demon Slayer for the Game Boy Color were the first three games in the series to have a North American release, all in the 1990s. The American release of Shin Megami Tensei: Nocturne in 2004 was the first main series video game to have an American release. Since then, the majority of the series has had an American release in addition to the Japanese, including Shin Megami Tensei: Persona 3, Shin Megami Tensei: Devil Summoner: Raidou Kuzunoha vs. The Soulless Army, and Shin Megami Tensei: Strange Journey.

Atlus USA also has published games under the loose moniker Marl Kingdom, beginning with the relatively unheard of Rhapsody: A Musical Adventure, in 2000.

Bandai Company, Limited is a Japanese toy making and video game company, as well as the producer of a large number of plastic model kits. It is the world's third-largest producer of toys (after Mattel and Hasbro). Some ex-Bandai group companies produce anime and tokusatsu programs.

Bandai was founded in 1950. In the 1960s Bandai expanded to include export sales. Bandai's racing car set, which first appeared in 1962, became a huge success. The 1970s continued to see Bandai expand, with Bandai Models being established in 1971. Although not their most profitable range, Bandai's 1/48 scale AFV models dominated that segment of the model kit market. Bandai America Inc. was established as local US sales/marketing operation in 1978.

Since the 1980s, Bandai has become the leading toy company of Japan, and to this day, has the main toy licenses in Japan to popular properties including Daikaiju, Ultraman, Super Robot, Kamen Rider, the Super Sentai and Power Rangers series (which they took part in creating), Gundam and many others.

The management of Bandai and Sega discussed a merger in the late 1990s, but the merger was later cancelled, citing "cultural differences".

During the late 1970s, Bandai sold the TV Jack console line: a series of pong based consoles. The last of the series was the Bandai Super Vision 8000 console released in 1979. It wasn't a simple pong based console system but a cartridge system with an 8-bit NEC D780C (Z80 clone) as CPU.

Their sister, Cathy, joined the company a year later. Before founding the company, Doug was a lawyer and Gary had held a number of jobs, including teaching Swedish at an American college. Galactic Empire had many names taken from African languages; a group of merchants was named Broederbond, Afrikaans for "association of brothers". To emphasize its family origin while avoiding a connection with the white-supremacist South African organization of the same name, the Carlstons altered the spelling when naming their company "Brøderbund".

For a brief time, Brøderbund was involved in the video game console market when it published a few games for the NES through its New Ventures Division. All of Broderbund's games for the NES, including the port of its own franchises Lode Runner, Spelunker and Raid on Bungeling Bay, were developed by third-party Japanese companies. Brøderbund published some titles that were produced by companies that didn't have a North American subsidiary, such as Compile's The Guardian Legend, Imagineer's The Battle of Olympus, and Legacy of the Wizard, the fourth installment in Nihon Falcom's Dragon Slayer series. Brøderbund also developed and marketed an ill-fated motion sensitive NES controller device called the U-Force, which was operated without direct physical contact between the player and the device.

The original companies that spawned Capcom's Japanese branch were I.R.M Corporation founded on May 30, 1979, as well as its subsidiary Japan Capsule Computers Co., Ltd., both of which were devoted to the manufacturing and distribution of electronic game machines. The two companies underwent a name change to Sambi Co., Ltd. in September 1981, while Capcom Co., Ltd. itself was first established on June 11, 1983, for the purpose of taking over the internal sales department.

In January 1989, the old affiliate company Capcom Co., Ltd. merged with Sambi Co., Ltd., resulting in the current Japanese branch. The name Capcom is a portmanteau of "Capsule Computers", a term coined by the company to describe the arcade machines it solely manufactured in its early years, designed to set themselves apart from personal computers that were becoming widespread at that time. The word capsule alludes to how Capcom likened its game software to "a capsule packed to the brim with gaming fun", as well as to the company's desire to protect its intellectual property with a hard outer shell, preventing illegal copies and inferior imitations.

In recent years, Capcom has been criticized for controversial sales tactics, such as having to pay for additional content which is already available within the game's files, most notably in Street Fighter X Tekken. Capcom has defended the practice.

Enix Corporation was a Japanese company that produced video games, anime and manga. The company was founded by Yasuhiro Fukushima as Eidansha Boshu Service Center and renamed Enix in 1982. Enix is perhaps best known for publishing the Dragon Quest series.

Enix was founded by Japanese architect-turned-entrepreneur Yasuhiro Fukushima. The company initially published tabloids that advertised real estate. After a failed attempt to go nationwide in 1982, the newly renamed Enix began its foray into the gaming market by holding a personal computer game programming contest. One of the winners was the puzzle game Door Door by Koichi Nakamura, which would become one of the company's better known home computer titles. The game was subsequently ported to the Nintendo Family Computer, but never saw any form of release outside of Japan. Nakamura would stay on board as one Enix's key programmers.

From 1983 to 1993, Enix published games for Japanese home computers including the NEC PC-8801, MSX, Sharp X68000, and FM-7. Beginning on the Famicom, Enix published the very successful Dragon Quest series, which, after the formation of Square Enix, had already sold over 35 million copies worldwide. Although the first few titles were developed by Chunsoft, other companies would also develop main installments, spin-offs, and remakes for the series including Heartbeat, ArtePiazza, and TOSE. The Dragon Quest franchise would carry over as one of Square Enix's most important assets. Other notable franchises published by Enix include the acclaimed Star Ocean and Valkyrie Profile series by tri-Ace, both of which would also continue with Square Enix.

Hudson Soft Co., Ltd, commonly known by its brand name Hudson, was a Japanese video game publisher. It was headquartered in the Midtown Tower in Tokyo Midtown, Akasaka, Minato, Tokyo, Japan, with an additional office in the Hudson Building in Sapporo.

Hudson Soft was founded on May 18, 1973. Initially, it dealt with personal computer products, but later expanded to the development and publishing of video games, mobile content, video game peripherals and music recording.

Hudson is best known for developing game series such as Bomberman, Adventure Island, and Bonk's Adventure.

Hudson Soft ceased to exist as a company on March 1, 2012 and was merged with Konami Digital Entertainment. Products and services will continue to be provided under the Hudson brand through Konami.

The relation between Hudson Soft and Konami can be traced back as early as 1985, when Hudson ported Konami's arcade game Pooyan to the Famicom. Moreover, Konami was a third party publisher for Hudson Soft's PC Engine in Japan. But the acquisition process of Hudson Soft by Konami would only begin in 2001.

Hudson had a long history of creating games for other publishers. The most notable of these were the Mario Party series, created for Nintendo. They developed the first eight console installments; however, Mario Party 9 was developed by Nintendo subsidiary Nd Cube, which consists of many former Hudson employees.

LJN Toys, Limited was an American toy company and a video game publisher. It manufactured toy lines and released video games based on licensed properties from movies, television shows, and celebrities.

LJN Toys, Limited

Successor	Acclaim Entertainment
Founded	1970
Defunct	1995
Headquarter	New York City

LJN Toys Ltd. was founded in 1970 by Jack Fredmans, who later founded other toy companies, notably THQ and Jakks Pacific (Holy Xerecas).

The name LJN came from the initials of Lewis J. Norman, the reverse of Norman J. Lewis, whose toy company had employed Friedman as a sales representative in the 1960s. Lewis initially backed the company financially, but later sold his interest to a Chinese investor.

In 1985, MCA, which had been actively acquiring companies in the mid-1980s, acquired LJN for around $67 million in an effort to retain more profits from the merchandising of its film properties.

In 1989, MCA decided to sell LJN after years of losses

Many of LJN's titles (particularly the pre-Acclaim ones) did not disclose the developer, there is no video game that has been developed in-house by LJN. All of LJN's video games were developed by external developers. Most games made by LJN were movie tie-ins or based on an existing brand. Many of these games were not received very well and the LJN name holds a reputation as one of the least-acclaimed game publishers of the pre-2000's. The games spanned over a number of console generations.

Konami Corporation

Founded	1969

Website	Konami.com Konami.net

Konami Corporation is a Japanese developer and publisher of numerous toys, trading cards, anime, tokusatsu, slot machines, arcade cabinets, video games, and additionally operates health and physical fitness clubs in Japan.

Konami is famous for popular video game series such as Castlevania, Contra, Dance Dance Revolution, Gradius, Frogger, Suikoden, Ganbare Goemon, Metal Gear, Pro Evolution Soccer, Silent Hill and Yu-Gi-Oh!. The 2012 purchase and absorption of Hudson Soft resulted in the addition of several other popular franchises, including Adventure Island, Bloody Roar, Bomberman, Far East of Eden and Star Soldier. Konami is the fifth-largest gaming company in the world by revenue.

Konami is also known for its password, the Konami Code, which traditionally gives many power-ups in its games. Although variants also exist, as in the Parodius series, and button naming can differ depending on the controller used, the classic Famicom or NES combination is: Up, Up, Down, Down, Left, Right, Left, Right, B, A. Although use of this code in more recent Konami productions has been sparse.

The company was founded in 1969 as a jukebox rental and repair business in Toyonaka, Osaka, Japan, by Kagemasa Kōzuki, who remains the company's chairman. The name "Konami" (/kəˈnɑːmiː/; Japanese pronunciation: [kó.nà.mì]) is a conjunction of the names Kagemasa Kozuki, Yoshinobu Nakama, and Tatsuo Miyasako.

Ocean Software Ltd (also known in the United States as Ocean of America, Inc.), commonly referred to as Ocean, was a British software development company, that became one of the biggest European video game developers/publishers of the 1980s and 1990s.

Ocean Software Ltd

Predecessor	Spectrum Software
Successor	Infogrames UK (1998)
Founded	1984
Defunct	1998
Headquarter	6, Central Street, Manchester, England

The company was founded by David Ward and Jon Woods and was based in Manchester. Ocean developed dozens of games for a variety of systems such as the ZX Spectrum, Commodore 64, MSX, Amstrad CPC, Commodore 16, Atari ST, Amiga, PC, and video game consoles such as the Nintendo Entertainment System, Super Nintendo Entertainment System, Sega Master System and Sega Mega Drive.

One of the most recognizable features of Ocean games on the Commodore 64 was the Ocean Loader. Since this computer used cassettes as storage, loading a game could take several minutes. Ocean used a special loading system that displayed a picture based on the game and played music while the game was loading. The Ocean loader music is still popular by fans of chiptunes.

Ocean was famous for often buying the rights to make video games from different arcade, movie and television franchises. Many license games combined several styles for example featuring platform action and car driving. The most well received license games by Ocean were RoboCop (1988), Batman The Movie (1989) and Robocop 3 (1992), which featured 3D graphics in 16-bit versions. Also the adventure game, Hook (1992) got positive reviews. The 1986 game Batman got a rating of 93% in Crash magazine.

Square Company, Limited

Successor	Square Enix
Founded	1986
Founder	Masashi Miyamoto
Defunct	2003
Headquarter	Tokyo, Japan

The Square Company, Limited was a Japanese video game company. It merged with Enix in 2003 and became part of Square Enix. The company sometimes used Squaresoft as a brand name to refer to their games, and the term is occasionally used to refer to the company itself.

Square was founded in Yokohama by Masashi Miyamoto after he graduated from Waseda, one of Japan's top universities. Back then, Square was a computer game software division of Den-Yu-Sha, a power line construction company owned by Miyamoto's father. While at the time game development was usually conducted by only one programmer, Miyamoto believed that it would be more efficient to have graphic designers, programmers and professional story writers working together on common projects. Square's first two titles were The Death Trap and its sequel Will: The Death Trap II, both designed by part-time employee Hironobu Sakaguchi and released on the NEC PC-8801.

Square has also made other widely known games such as Chrono Trigger, Chrono Cross, Secret of Mana, Legend of Mana, Xenogears, Brave Fencer Musashi, Parasite Eve, Parasite Eve 2, Saga Frontier, Romancing Saga, Vagrant Story, Kingdom Hearts, and Super Mario RPG: Legend of the Seven Stars (done under the guidance of Shigeru Miyamoto).

A merger between Square and its competitor Enix was in consideration since at least 2000; however, the financial failure of the movie Final Fantasy: The Spirits Within made Enix hesitant to join with a company which was losing money.

Sunsoft is a Japanese video game developer founded as a division of Sun Corporation, itself a division of Sun Electronics, or Sun Denshi Corporation in Japan.

Sunsoft

Founded	1971
Headquarter	Kōnan, Aichi, Japan
Website	sunsoftgames.com

Sunsoft's history in video games began in arcades with two video games released in 1978: Block Challenger and Block Perfect. They later had several arcade hits in the early 1980s such as Arabian, Ikki and Kangaroo. In the latter half of the 1980s Sunsoft began developing original games and technology for the home video game console market, with emphasis mostly on the NES. Sunsoft had gone international at that time, and it had the publishing might to secure major licenses of the day (such as Batman and The Addams Family).

Outside Japan, the definite golden era for the company was the 8-bit NES, on which their games were widely considered state of the art in graphical and aural prowess. Sunsoft was slow to transition to 16-bit consoles, however, releasing several NES and Famicom titles that went unnoticed at launch, and have only been rediscovered by enthusiasts recently, such as: Ufouria (Hebereke), Mr. Gimmick (Gimmick!), and Journey to Silius (Raf World). Additionally, a number of Sega games, including Fantasy Zone, Fantasy Zone II and After Burner, have been ported for Nintendo consoles by Sunsoft. The games Sunsoft produced in the 16-bit era were no longer as polished or cutting-edge, the licenses were less prominent, and no new hit games appeared. Finally, in 1995, they heavily restructured in the face of bankruptcy, eventually resurfacing with a scant number of video games for the PlayStation such as Monster Seed and games for the Game Boy Color.

Taito is best known for producing hit arcade games, such as Space Invaders and Bubble Bobble. They have produced arcade games all around the world, while also importing and distributing American coin-op video games in Japan. Taito also owns several arcades in Japan known as Taito Stations.

The company was founded in 1953 by a Russian Jewish businessman named Michael Kogan as Taito Trading Company. Taito started out importing and distributing vending machines. Later, they began leasing jukeboxes and they eventually started to manufacture their own. They eventually began producing electro-mechanical arcade games in the 1960s.

Taito introduced their first video arcade game in 1973. It was also this year that they changed their name from Taito Trading Company to Taito Corporation. In 1978 Toshihiro Nishikado, a designer at Taito, created Space Invaders which became the company's most popular title ever and one of the most memorable games in arcade history, responsible for beginning the golden age of arcade video games. The game was published in the US by Midway.

Due to the huge success of Space Invaders, Taito opened in 1979 an American division called Taito America Corporation in order to release games in North America.

Tecmo Co., Ltd., is a Japanese video game corporation. Tecmo is best known for the Star Force, Dead or Alive, Ninja Gaiden, Deception, Monster Rancher, Rygar, Tecmo Bowl, Fatal Frame, and Gallop Racer video game series.

The company was founded on July 31, 1967 as a supplier of cleaning equipment. Two years later, in 1969, it started to sell amusement equipment.

In March 1981, a U.S. division was inaugurated in Los Angeles as U.S. Tehkan, Inc.. A month later, on April 1981, Tehkan released in Japan its first arcade video game titled Pleiads (which was distributed in America by Centuri). When it was still called Tehkan, the company released arcade games such as Bomb Jack and Tehkan World Cup.

On January 8, 1986, Tehkan officially changed its name to Tecmo Co, Ltd.

On the 3 June 2008 Team Ninja head Tomonobu Itagaki resigned from the company and filed a 145 million yen ($1.3 million) lawsuit for "unpaid completion bonuses" and "emotional distress". This was followed by another lawsuit filed on the 16th of June by two plaintiffs on behalf of Tecmo's 300 employees for unpaid wages amounting to ¥8.3 million.

On August 29, 2008 Square Enix made plans for a friendly takeover of Tecmo by purchasing shares at a 30 percent premium with a total bid of ¥22.3 billion. On September 4, 2008 Tecmo officially declined the takeover proposal.

Ultra Software Corporation

Former type	Shell subsidiary of Konami
Founded	1988
Defunct	1992
Headquarter	Buffalo Grove, IL, USA
Parent	Konami

Ultra Software Corporation was a shell corporation and publishing label created in 1988 as a subsidiary of Konami of America, in an effort to get around Nintendo of America's strict licensing rules for the North American Konami release games for Nintendo consoles.

One of these rules was that a third-party company could only publish up to five games per year for the NES in the US. This was hardly convenient for Konami, which had begun releasing more than ten games a year for both the Family Computer and Family Computer Disk System in Japan. With a greater library than they were allowed to localize, Konami formed the Ultra Games brand to extend their annual library to ten games a year.

Ultra's first game was the NES version of Metal Gear. At first, Ultra was dedicated to localizing Konami's pre-existing software from Japan, but later they began publishing works from other companies as well. Some of Konami's most notable games released under the Ultra label include Operation C (an original Game Boy installment of the Contra series), Snake's Revenge and the first few Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles games for the NES and Game Boy.

After the North American launch of the Super Nintendo Entertainment System, Nintendo became less strict on the number of games third-parties could publish. As a result, Ultra Games began losing its purpose and Konami shortly dropped the label in 1992.

In Europe, Konami established the Palcom Software Limited subsidiary for similar purposes.

Virgin Interactive

Successor	Avalon Interactive
Founded	1981
Defunct	2003
Headquarter	London, England

Virgin Interactive was a British video game publisher. It was formed as Virgin Games Ltd. in 1981. The company became much larger after purchasing the budget label, Mastertronic in 1987. It was part of the Virgin Group. In 1994 it was renamed Virgin Interactive.

It published games for PC and systems, including the Amiga, C64, Sega Master System, Super Nintendo Entertainment System, Sega Saturn, Sony PlayStation, Nintendo 64 and Dreamcast among others.

It helped the career of many developers, including Westwood Studios (who developed Command & Conquer Series and the PC port of Resident Evil) and Synergistic. Also, many workers for Shiny Entertainment, including David Perry, worked for Virgin before splitting off to create Earthworm Jim.

Also among Virgin Interactive alumni are famed video game composer Tommy Tallarico, artist Doug Ten-Napel, designer David Bishop, animator Bill Kroyer, animator/artists Andy Luckey and Mike Dietz and programmer Andy Astor.

In 1993 Virgin Interactive created the "Digicel" process, originally for an unpublished game called "Dynoblaze" which was managed by Andy Luckey, Paul Schmiedeke and Bill Kroyer. Bill K. Key to developing the process were Dr. Stephen Clarke-Willson, David Perry, designer David Bishop, animator Bill Kroyer, animation producer Andy Luckey, technical director Paul Schmiedeke, animator Mike Dietz and programmer Andy Astor. The technology was first released to the general public in Disney's Aladdin for the Sega Mega Drive/Sega Genesis and subsequently on such projects as The Lion King video game.

Active Enterprises Ltd.

Founder Vince Perri, Raul Gomila
Headquarter Miami, Florida, United States

Active Enterprises Ltd. is a defunct American video game developer headquartered in Miami, Florida which was active in the early 1990s.

Active Enterprises was formed by Raul Gomila and Vince Perri in 1989, and was founded by the genesis of the idea behind Action 52, a collection of 52 original games on one cartridge which was developed and published internally and eventually released for the NES in 1991. The game was not licensed by Nintendo.

Promising 52 “new and original exciting games”, Action 52 was initially sold for the comparatively high price of $199 USD, and was backed up by a promotional contest which offered a grand prize of $104,000. However, the title soon became notorious for the poor quality of its games and their numerous bugs and glitches, while the contest, which involved reaching a stage in the game Ooze became essentially unwinnable due to these same factors. Nonetheless, in 1993 Active Enterprises contracted Farsight Technologies to port Action 52 to the Sega Genesis and the SNES, and develop the sports game Sports 5. Only Action 52 for the Genesis was released out of these 3 games.

Active Enterprises employed 4 college students who developed the original Action 52 NES game cartridge. They have kept a low profile until recently. In August 2012 one of the four original Action 52 developers surfaced and surprised the gaming community with their find, their very own original boxed Action 52 NES Prototype cartridge, the only other Action 52 Prototype known to exist. Along with never before seen original Action 52 and Cheetahmen posters and artwork, they posted an eBay auction selling the items for a $97,000 Buy It Now option or Best Offer. The auction generated over 10,000 views and 50 offers. They have since created a blog documenting the auction, the prototype, and more importantly, their part in the development of the Action 52 NES cartridge.

American Game Cartridges (AGC) was an American video game developer and publisher established as a subsidiary of ShareData in 1990. Like ShareData, American Game Cartridges was headquartered in Chandler, Arizona. AGC published three video games for the NES in 1990.

American Game Cartridges

Founded 1990
Defunct 1994
Headquarter Chandler, Arizona, U.S.
Parent ShareData

Prior to the founding of American Game Cartridges, ShareData hired Richard C. Frick as Vice President of Product Development. Frick worked previously at Atari Games, and had some experience with their console game subsidiary, Tengen. Frick was acquainted with this strategy, and applied it at ShareData’s new company, American Game Cartridges. To defeat the NES’s lockout chip, called 10NES, AGC licensed technology from Color Dreams.

AGC also licensed two titles from arcade game manufacturer Exidy: Chiller (1986) and Death Race (1976), which they adapted to the NES in 1990. Chiller was AGC’s first game release, and was also ShareData’s first title for the NES. Death Race quickly followed, as did an original work called Shockwave (1990).

Keeping with ShareData’s business model of producing low-cost video games, AGC attempted to undersell their competition by as much as 30%. However, debts mounted throughout 1991, and by the fourth quarter AGC’s creditors were trying to force the company into a reorganization under Chapter 11 of the United States’ Bankruptcy Code.

American Game Cartridges planned several other game releases, including a conversion of Exidy’s Crossbow (1983), but was unable to complete development.

Color Dreams was a company that developed video games for the NES.

Color Dreams

Successor	Wisdom Tree
Founded	1988
Defunct	1991

While most companies that developed NES games obtained an official license from Nintendo to produce game cartridges, Color Dreams was unusual in that it developed NES games without an official license. To produce these unlicensed games, Color Dreams had to bypass the NES's "lock out" chip (the 10NES). The company successfully bypassed the system, developed a game (Baby Boomer), and released it in 1989. Several other titles followed in 1989 and 1990, including Captain Comic, Crystal Mines, and Robodemons.

As a result of its reputation for releasing poor games, Color Dreams formed the label Bunch Games in 1990. Bunch Games was meant to be a label that Color Dreams could use to release lower quality games so that its reputation would not be damaged further. In 1991, Color Dreams formed Wisdom Tree for the purpose of releasing Christianity-themed games. The Wisdom Tree label resulted in Color Dreams' best selling titles, including Spiritual Warfare and Bible Adventures. While Wisdom Tree remains active today and is still selling religious video games, Color Dreams quit the video game business in the mid 1990s. Wisdom Tree is no longer associated with Color Dreams.

One Color Dreams project that was never released was a game based on the movie Hellraiser. The game cartridge, or "Super Cartridge" as it was called at the time, contained an extra processor that modified the tiles in the cartridge RAM without alerting the NES processor. This allowed for enhanced graphic effects rarely seen on the NES, such as a fully animated background running without the lag usually found with such tricks. The project was eventually abandoned.

Camerica

Founded 1988

Camerica was a company owned and operated by David J. Harding. It was a video game company that was notable for producing unlicensed NES games and hardware.

Camerica created many early peripherals for the NES, such as Supersonic The Joystick, a wireless controller add-on. Nintendo sued Camerica and their USA distributor, Galoob Toy many times. Camerica and Galoob Toy prevailed every time. There were lawsuits in California, New York and Canada. Nintendo had to pay Galoob Toy US$15,000,000 in damages over one of those lawsuits.

Since Camerica still lacked license to produce NES games, they had to create their own cartridges that would bypass Nintendo's lock-out chip. Like the circuit used in Color Dreams cartridges, the Camerica lock-out defeat generated glitch pulses that froze the chip. The cartridges they made were shaped slightly differently from Nintendo's cartridges, though they still fit in the NES. The most notable difference however was in color; all Camerica cartridges were gold and later silver. They also featured a switch for play on European NES consoles.

Camerica released the Codemasters-designed Game Genie in Canada and the UK.

Thor Aackerlund was a spokesperson for the brand.

PANESIAN LTD.

Hacker International was a Japanese video game company that developed and published games from 1990 to 2001 for the Nintendo Famicom (including Famicom Disk System), NEC PC Engine (including PC Engine CD), Sony PlayStation (as Map Japan) consoles, and Windows PCs.

The company was known for its play-for-porn approach to gaming, with such games as AV Pachi-Slot (Hot Slots) and Soap Panic (Bubble Bath Babes) featuring female nudity as a reward for skilful playing. These games were usually distributed through mail order and sold approximately 30,000 to 50,000 copies each. Many of their games were developed by Taiwanese companies and were released in non-pornographic form elsewhere in the world; however three were released in the United States for the NES with pornography intact (albeit sometimes modified to “Westernise” the girls’ features) by another Taiwanese company, Panesian.

The Hacker name was first used by Satoru Hagiwara, an entrepreneur and former music producer, for a monthly PC magazine. Hacker International was founded by Hagiwara as an outlet for its writers’ ideas; its first product was the Hacker Junior, an upgrade for Famicom systems that provided composite video output and turbo controllers, for which they were sued by Nintendo and eventually settled out of court. The company was also known for the Disk Hacker software which allowed users to copy Famicom Disk System disks using only an ordinary Disk System (as opposed to the official method of using Nintendo’s authorised Disk Writer units, which were placed only in game stores and charged 500 yen to copy a selected game to a customer’s disk). Several versions were released to combat successive anti-piracy measures introduced by Nintendo.

None of Hacker’s games, with the exception of their 15 PlayStation titles, were licensed by the respective console manufacturers; Hiroshi Yamauchi personally opposed pornographic content in Famicom games, believing they would tarnish Nintendo’s reputation. When Tokuma Shoten’s Family Computer magazine published advertisements for Hacker’s games, it felt its relationship with Nintendo—which it relied on for preview materials—was so threatened that five of Tokuma’s top executives travelled to Nintendo to apologise to Yamauchi in person. However, NEC was more tolerant of Hacker’s PC Engine releases (under the Games Express brand) and actually thanked Hacker for helping console sales. Hacker became a licensee for the PlayStation under the name Map Japan, releasing 15 games, but eventually closed in 2001 due to competition from other publishers and Hagiwara’s own loss of interest in gaming.

Thin Chen Enterprise, also known as Sachen or in the original name Sheng Qian Enterprise Co., Ltd, was a Taiwanese company that developed several original games for the NES, Mega Drive and Game Boy.

All of Thin Chen’s games were produced without license from the console manufacturers (With the exception of the Watara Supervision and Mega Duck); the company produced at least 70 unique games for the NES and Famicom and at least 32 for the Game Boy (albeit compiled into eight 4-in-1 cartridges), making it the most prolific unlicensed developer and publisher for both consoles by a considerable margin. The company also produced its own NES hardware clones, such as the Q-Boy.

Tengen

Founded	1987
Defunct	1994
Headquarter	Milpitas, California, USA
Parent	Atari Games

Tengen was a video game publisher and developer that was created by arcade game manufacturer Atari Games.

Atari had been split into two distinct companies. Atari Corporation was responsible for computer and console games and hardware and owned the rights to the Atari brand for these domains. Atari Games was formed from Atari's arcade division, and were able to use the Atari name on arcade releases but not on console or computer games. When Atari Games wanted to enter the console-game market, it needed to create a new label that did not use the Atari name. The new subsidiary was dubbed Tengen, which in the Japanese nomenclature of the oriental game Go refers to the central point of the board (the word "Atari" comes from the same game). Tengen then made an agreement with Namco to bring some of their Family Computer games to the NES in North America before Namco opened its own North American branch (Namco Home-ettek) in 1990. Tengen also released games by Sunsoft (another developer without a North American branch).

Tengen unsuccessfully tried to negotiate with Nintendo for a less restrictive license (Nintendo restricted their licensees to releasing only five games per year, and required their games to be NES-exclusive for two years). Nintendo refused, so in December 1987 Tengen agreed to the standard licensing terms. In 1988, Tengen released its first and only three cartridges licensed through Nintendo—R.B.I. Baseball, Pac-Man and Gauntlet. Meanwhile, Tengen secretly worked to bypass Nintendo's lock-out chip called 10NES that gave it control over which games were published for the NES. While numerous manufacturers managed to override this chip by zapping it with a voltage spike, Tengen engineers feared this could potentially damage NES consoles and expose them to unnecessary liability. The other problem was that Nintendo made frequent modifications to the NES to prevent this technique from working. Instead the company chose to reverse engineer the chip and decipher the code required to unlock it. However, the engineers were unable to do so, and the launch date for its first batch of games was rapidly approaching.

With time running short, Tengen turned to the United States Copyright Office. Its lawyers contacted the government office to request a copy of the Nintendo lock-out program, claiming that the company needed it for potential litigation against Nintendo. Once obtained, it used the program to create its own chip that would unlock the NES. When Tengen launched the unlicensed versions of its games, Nintendo immediately sued Tengen for copyright and patent infringement. In the initial phases of trial, the court sided with Nintendo, but the sides settled before the matter was fully resolved.

Their cartridges for unlicensed games do not come in the universally recognizable semi-square grey shape licensed Nintendo games come in; instead, they are rounded and matte-black, and resemble the original Atari cartridges.

Tengen faced another court challenge with Nintendo in 1989 in copyright controversy over Tetris. Tengen lost this suit as well and was forced to recall what was estimated to be hundreds of thousands of unsold cartridges (having sold only about 50,000).

Despite its problems with Nintendo, Tengen went on to produce games for the Sega Mega Drive/Genesis, Sega Master System, Sega Game Gear, Sega CD, Atari Lynx, and NEC Turbo Grafx-16. The company also licensed games for home computers such as the Amiga and the Atari ST, most of these were published by British company Domark. It was best known for its ports of popular Atari arcade games, including Klax, Hard Drivin', STUN Runner, and Paperboy, although they published many other titles as well. In 1993, after Time Warner bought a controlling stake in Atari Games, the Tengen name was discontinued and home games were now released under the Time Warner Interactive (TWI) brand.

Wisdom Tree

Headquarter Arizona, United States

Wisdom Tree is an American manufacturer and distributor of unlicensed Christian video games.

In the late 1980s, Color Dreams and Tengen were the largest producers of unlicensed games for the NES, but, due to pressure from Nintendo, Color Dreams faced many difficulties getting retailers to stock its games. Although Color Dreams violated no laws in opting out of the Nintendo licensing system with its workaround of Nintendo's lockout chip technology, Nintendo was displeased that it was receiving no revenues from Color Dreams games, and wanted to prevent other companies from following suit. Thus, Nintendo began to threaten to cease selling games to retailers that sold unlicensed NES games. Because retailers could not afford to stop doing business with Nintendo, unlicensed companies were at a disadvantage. Color Dreams thus had great difficulty getting access to the retail market, and decided to work outside of mainstream NES distribution channels. Also, many of their games were reported to have problems getting to run properly, and were criticized for their lack of quality and gameplay.

In 1990, Color Dreams began to consider producing games with biblical themes. At the time, there were few religious video games for console systems. Officials at Color Dreams saw that there was a market for them and that many stores that would be most interested in retailing Christian games – Christian bookstores – were likely not to sell video games at all, and thus not vulnerable to pressure from Nintendo. While many Christian bookstores at the time sold much more than books—they also sold religious movies, Contemporary Christian music, and other goods—such stores did not sell video games. In order to convince these stores to sell religious games, Color Dreams, through its new Wisdom Tree subsidiary (which would live on long after the demise of its parent company) worked hard to promote this new genre of video games. Wisdom Tree sent Christian bookstores 3-foot Bible Adventures displays, as well as VHS cassettes showing gameplay. These promotional videos made the case to Christian bookstores using lines like: “This game promotes Bible literacy and teaches children about the Bible while they play a ‘fun and exciting’ Super Mario Bros. style video game.” Ultimately, these efforts proved successful, and Color Dreams was able not only to find a new distribution channel for its games, it was also able to launch a new genre of video games, which meant that no other companies competed with its new Wisdom Tree label. 3.32.

Wisdom Tree's titles always had a Christian theme to them, and were often sold in Christian bookstores and the like. Most games attempted to use the medium to tell Bible stories in such a way as to make them interesting to children of the video game era. Interestingly, many of their games were partial conversions of titles previously released by Color Dreams, with appropriate changes in theme. A Wisdom Tree product catalog shows screenshots from Joshua & The Battle of Jericho displaying a side-scrolling game using the Bible Adventures engine. The actual released game used the Crystal Mines/Exodus engine.

The company's first release as Wisdom Tree was Bible Adventures, a three-in-one multicart which borrowed many gameplay elements found in the American Super Mario Bros. 2, applied to three different Bible stories: Noah collecting animals for the Ark, saving Baby Moses from Pharaoh's men, and re-enacting the story of David and Goliath. The game sold 350,000 copies, encouraging the company to continue pursuing this path of making games.

Other Wisdom Tree games included Exodus (a conversion of Color Dreams's old Crystal Mines game, with the story of the Israelites' 40-year desert trek grafted onto it), King of Kings (similar to Bible Adventures, but now featuring three events in the early life of Jesus Christ) and Bible Buffet (a “video board game” with Bible quizzes). They also released Spiritual Warfare, an action-adventure title similar in style to The Legend of Zelda, albeit with the requisite religious theme (the player, as a foot soldier in the Lord's army, is tasked with saving the souls of the heathen populace, using fruit of the spirit). The company also released ports of some of these games to the Sega Genesis and Game Boy, as well as Bible-reading programs (both King James and NIV versions) for Game Boy. Their Sunday Funday, a 1995 conversion of the Color Dreams game Menace Beach, is one of the last commercial NES releases in the United States.

Wisdom Tree holds the distinction of having made the only unlicensed game ever commercially released for the American Super Nintendo Entertainment System, Super 3D Noah's Ark. This conversion of the Wolfenstein 3D engine featured the player as Noah, attempting to quell upset animals on the Ark by flinging sleep-inducing fruit at them. Its shape (the only American SNES cartridge to not use the standard Nintendo-manufactured shell) resembles that of the SNES Game Genie or Sonic & Knuckles on the Sega Genesis, with a pass-through cartridge port at the top; the game requires an "official" Nintendo-licensed cartridge plugged into this pass-through, which allows the game to bypass the SNES's lockout protection and boot up.

The Wisdom Tree game King of Kings was listed as the honorable mention in Gamespy.com's "Seven Christmas Games That Make You Hate Christmas", due to its unentertaining gameplay and the farcical feel of dodging "acid-spitting camels".

Wisdom Tree is still active today, selling religious video games. The company released an all-in-one "TV controller" system featuring seven of their NES games in a single, self-contained unit. More recently, they have released Heaven Bound, a more modern 3D game for the PC. These games are produced on 3D Game Studio (e.g. Joseph and Galilee Flyer), using the default models that come with the program. All Wisdom Tree NES games are playable through the official website in the Arcade Section via vNES, a Java-based NES emulator.

In 2013, retro game publisher Piko Interactive acquired the rights from Wisdom Tree to release actual cart reprints of various Wisdom Tree games. The rare and now sought after Noah's Ark 3D is the first game to go into reprint by Piko Interactive.

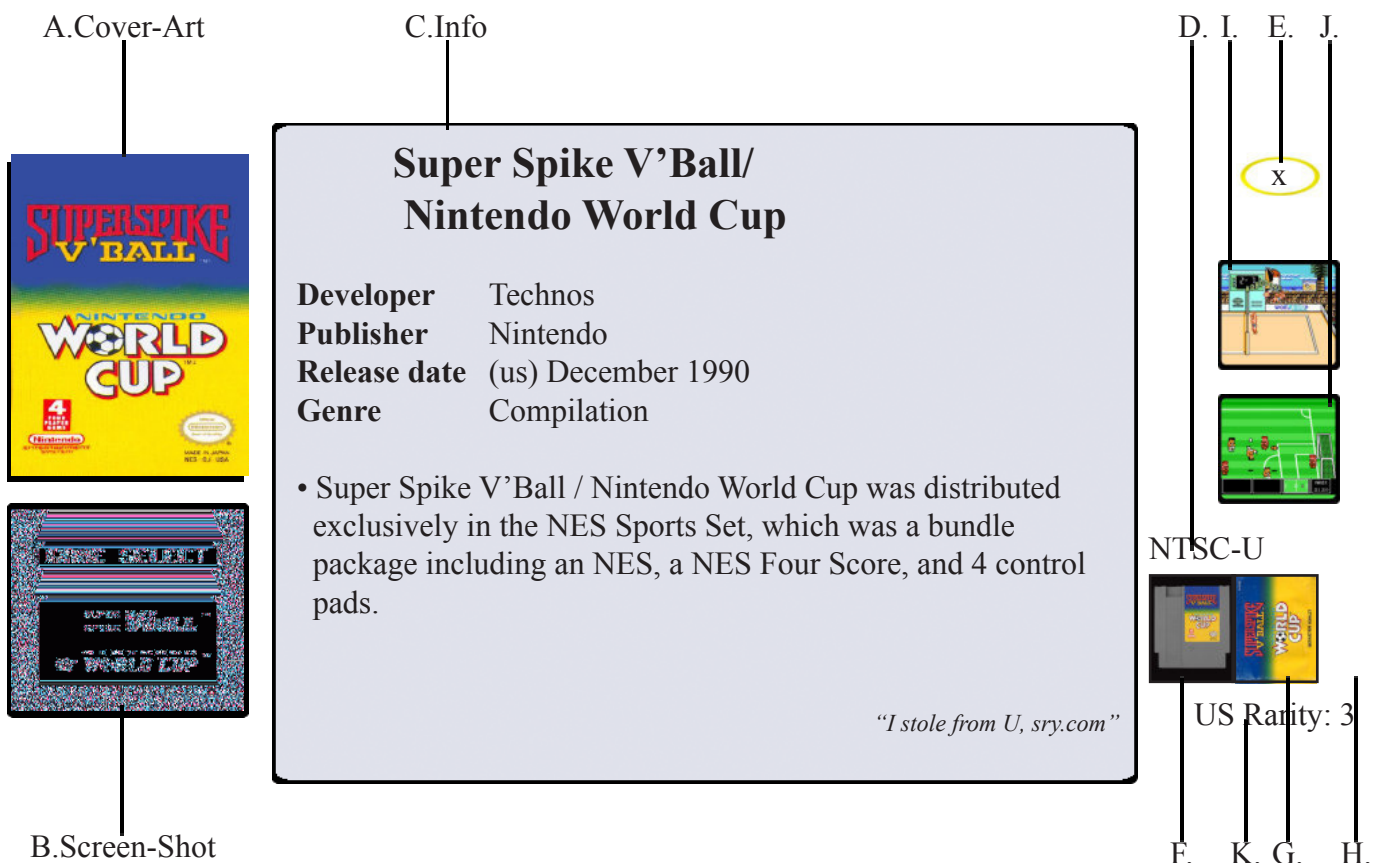

NES GAMES

This is the main portion of the book. This is what i envisioned the book to be. A collection of every official NES game with a sweet cover art, a screen-shot and fun information about the game. The side pictures came later, and made the book that much harder to complete.

Page Break-Down

This is a break-down of what the NES GAMES pages consist of:

A. Cover-Art

The cover art is usually from the U.S. release of the game. The picture is more often than not taken from "the Hyperspin database", where the covers are used for an emulator front on your home computer. I have an gold membership there. Pretty cool site.

B. Screen-Shot

The screen-shot is often taken from "the emumovies database", an sister site of the Hyperspin site. If it is not from there, then google is very helpfull with giving me pictures. Some sites that often has been used, cause` they are one of the first in the search-bar, is "emuparadise", an emulator site, and "questicle", that is a great site of a guy reviewing every NES game, also, none of them uses stupid watermarks on their pictures.

C. Info

The Info box is hard to get right. The Developers of NES games is often different on sites, and it`s difficult to find what is true. I suspect much of my information is wrong, and often the developer credited is actually the makers of the original game, e.g. arcades, and not the one who did the NES port for example.

The Publisher is not as a problem, and it is often credited to the same on the different web-sites.

Release Date is usually the correct one on the wikipedia list, i used “Nesguide.com” as an insurance to see if it was the same.

Genre is often a compilation of genres, as an Super Mario game is usually considered an platformer, but can also be named; adventure or side-scroller. I often went whit what “Nesguide.com” consodered the genre was.

In the info or trivia section, i wanted some sentences that was informativ, interesting, and/or fun. If i did not use wikipedia or change the content to much, and did a direct transcript, i would try to credit the source material. The credit is in italic.

D.Region

This is the region of the cover-art, manual and screen-shot that it represent.

E.Web Reviews

The review score SHOULD and MUST be taken with a grain of salt. I used the review score from “Nesguide.com”, cause` they used several web review score and compiled them into a score, but it often only had one review that it took from, so the score would be pretty biased. If the site did not have a review, i would usually use the GameFAQs score.

This is the setup of the review score of Rad Gravity on “Nesguide.com”:

Game Freaks 365: 5.4

GameFAQs Reader Review Average: 7.8

Honest Gamers: 9.0

Mean Machines Mag UK: 8.2

AVG: 7.6

F.Cart

Simple picture of the game cart of the corresponding region. The cart art is taken and used in a photoshop template of a NES cart, so all the carts become the same color and size.

G.Manual

Finding a quality PAL or SCN manual picture through google was often an impossible task, and i sometimes had to cheat. As of the case of “the adventure of Rad Gravity”. I could not for the life of me, find a manual cover of the U.S. version of the game. Every picture seemed to stem from the same broken scan of the manual. So i had to cheat an` use a spanish cover art. The manual is the same, only difference is the words “Manual of Rad Gravity” is in spanish and not in english. If the manual has the same cover-art and english title i would often use an existing manual picture from another region. The picture is so small it is hard to make out what the hell it is anyway.

H.Box Art

Pretty straight forward with the U.S. boxes, since the site “nintendoage.com” had pretty much all of them. That site was invaluable in many things, and made awhile lot much easier, inculding this. If the picture is blank, then the game did not come with it. Mostly multicarts.

I.Title Screen or SCN cart/manual/box

I wanted to have pictures of the SCN games, since that is my region of NES games. If the game did not have an SCN release, then i used a screen-shot of the title screen of the game, or another gameplay screen-shot/cut-scene

J.Title Screen or PAL cart/manual/box

The reason of PAL pictures of the NES games was because they often came in boxes with alternative artwork. If the game did not have a PAL release, then i used a screen-shot.

K.Rarity

The rarity is from “Nesguide.com”. It consist of a U.S. rarity and an SCN rarity if it was present. The rarity is just from the cart. The manual and box is usually at a higher rarity score. It should also be used as an refrence point, and not to be taken all too literally.

- Unlike the movie, the game adaptation of Back to the Future was almost universally panned. Bob Gale, screenwriter of the Back to the Future films, has called the NES game “one of the worst games ever,” and even insisted in interviews that fans should not buy it. According to Gale, LJN refused his requests to give input while the game was being developed; once he was shown the game, he asked them to make changes, but was told it was too late in the process to change anything.

- The Nintendo World Championships was a 1990 Nintendo-promoted video game competition that toured twenty-nine cities across the United States. It was based on scoring points in three NES games (Super Mario Bros., Rad Racer, and Tetris) within a time limit of 6 minutes and 21 seconds.
- The competition was based loosely on the movie The Wizard.

- The top winner in each age category took home a $10,000 U.S. savings bond, a new 1990 Geo Metro Convertible, a 40" rear-projection TV, and a gold painted Mario trophy. Runners up in each age category received a $1,000 U.S. savings bond and a silver Mario trophy.
- 90 of the copies exist as the official gray cartridge and were given out to finalists after the championships concluded. The other 26 are gold (like the The Legend of Zelda cartridge) and were given out as prizes in a separate contest held by Nintendo Power magazine. Each gray cartridge has a unique number making the cartridge easier to track and difficult to counterfeit. However, the gold cartridges have no unique identification numbers and are difficult to track and authenticate. The circuit boards in the gray and gold cartridges are identical. Both versions of the cartridge feature DIP switches on the front which select the time limit of the game. To play the cartridge, one must have a controller connected to both controller ports and press start on the second player's controller. For the competition, there was a special switch that would start all games simultaneously.
- The Nintendo World Championships 1990 game cartridge is considered to be the most valuable NES cartridge released and one of the rarest (second only to the NTSC version of Stadium Events). Because fewer gold cartridges were manufactured, they are rarer and demand a higher price than the gray cartridges. The gold version has been described as the "holy grail" of console game collecting.
- In 2008, the website retrousb.com began selling reproduction cartridges of Nintendo World Championships. The reproduced cartridge is nearly identical to the original, complete with its own DIP switches. The differences are that the cartridge is blue in color and has a different board in order to avoid confusion with authentic cartridges. It is region free.
- A gold cartridge was offered on eBay in January 2014. It had a starting bid of $4,999 and eventually reached $100,088. If this sale is finalized, it will top the old record-selling price for an NES game, which was for the sale of a sealed copy of Stadium Events (NTSC version) at $75,000.

DO SOME MOONLIGHTING AS A CRIME FIGHTER.

Night falls like a black shroud over Metro City, and the ancient Egyptian villain Sutekh goes to work. And so do you. For you are the mysterious, unknown hero who lurks in the corners, melts into the shadows, and rules the darkness. You are Nightshade for the NES™!

Infiltrate one hundred of the city's most seedy recesses while chasing thieves, thugs and muggers you must squeeze for clues, or destroy. Question dangerous characters, and hunt for hidden objects like force gloves and energy domes. All essential for survival as you fend off the hired assassins hot on your tail.

Follow Sutekh's trail of treachery too closely and you'll be figuring out how to escape the jackal pit, the human printing press, the closing wall of spikes, and other traps. Use your powers of intellect and keep your eyes open and your mind alert. Or you'll no longer control the night, you'll be consumed by it.

Famicom games

This is just a sample of the Famicom library.

The total collection of Famicom games is 1,055 while the collection of FamicomDisc games consist of 229.

Japanese Famicom cartridges are shaped slightly differently than the NES carts and while the NES used a 72-pin interface, the Famicom system used a 60-pin design. Unlike NES games, official Famicom cartridges were produced in many colors of plastic. In Japan, several companies manufactured the cartridges for the Famicom. This allowed these companies to develop their own customized chips designed for specific purposes, such as chips that increased the quality of sound in their games.

In 1986, Nintendo released the Famicom Disk System in Japan, a type of floppy drive that uses a single-sided, proprietary 5 cm disk and plugs into the cartridge port. It contains RAM for the game to load into and an extra wavetable sound chip. The disks were originally obtained from kiosks in malls and other public places where buyers could select a title and have it written to the disk. This process would cost less than cartridges and users could take the disk back to a vending booth and have it rewritten with a new game.

The disks were used both for storing the game and saving progress and total capacity was 128k.

Unlicensed games

Unlicensed Games

Several companies, refusing to pay the licensing fee or having been rejected by Nintendo, found ways to circumvent the console's authentication system. Most of these companies created circuits that used a voltage spike to temporarily disable the 10NES chip in the NES. A few unlicensed games released in Europe and Australia came in the form of a dongle that would be connected to a licensed game, in order to use the licensed game's 10NES chip for authentication. In order to combat unlicensed games, Nintendo of America threatened retailers who sold them with losing their supply of licensed titles. In addition, multiple revisions were made to the NES PCBs to prevent these games from working.

Atari Games created a line of NES products under the name Tengen and took a different approach. The company attempted to reverse engineer the lockout chip to develop its own "Rabbit" chip. However, Tengen also obtained a description of the lockout chip from the United States Patent and Trademark Office by falsely claiming that it was required to defend against present infringement claims in a legal case. Nintendo sued Tengen for copyright infringement, which Tengen lost as it could not prove that the legally obtained patent documents had not been used by the reverse engineering team. Tengen's antitrust claims against Nintendo were never finally decided.

Color Dreams produced Christian video games under the subsidiary name Wisdom Tree. They were never sued by Nintendo as the company probably feared a public relations backlash.

Following the introduction of the Sega Mega Drive (Sega Genesis in North America), Nintendo began to face real competition in the industry, and in the early 1990s was forced to reevaluate its stance towards its developers, many of whom had begun to defect to other systems. When the console was reissued as the NES 2, the 10NES chip was omitted from the console.

Homebrew Games

On Dec. 10, 1994, Nintendo released the final official game for its Entertainment System, a puzzle game called Wario's Woods. And that was all she wrote: After a nine-year run, the groundbreaking 8-bit game console's time had expired, and gamers would move on to more technologically adept hardware.

But some fans, whether too in love with the pixelated aesthetic or the creative constraints of limited hardware, don't want to move on. So they devote themselves to learning the ins and outs of the Ricoh 6502 processor, practice their pixel art and create games that could have been on the shelves in the early '90s. Then they go the extra mile and produce cartridges, boxes and manuals and sell their creations to like-minded fans who want new content for their old, old machines.

While the earliest Nintendo Entertainment System "homebrew" games were rather simple, the latest creations are significantly more polished.

"wired.com/2013/01/battle-kid-2/"

Several compilers are available for the Nintendo Entertainment System, but like the Atari 2600, most development directly applies assembly language. One impediment to NES homebrew development is the relative difficulty involved with producing physical cartridges, although third party flash carts do exist, making homebrew possible on original NES hardware. Several varieties of custom integrated circuits are used within NES cartridges to expand system capabilities; most are difficult to replicate except by scavenging old cartridges. The hardware lockout mechanism of the NES further complicates construction of usable physical cartridges. However, the NES-101 removed the 10NES lockout chip so any game, whether homebrew, unlicensed, or another region of an official game, can be played. The 10NES chip can eventually be permanently disabled by performing a minor change to the hardware.

System packages

Nintendo released the Nintendo Entertainment Systems in bundles. The bundles may be the reason why the system became so popular with consumers. Initially retailers thought that the accessory known as R.O.B. would be the big selling point of the console, and was included in the Deluxe Set. It ended up being Super Mario Bros., however, which was bundled with the Control Deck set, that made the console so popular. The Control Deck was one of two bundles that Nintendo released for the NES in the beginning of the system's life-span.

Nintendo would continue to distribute bundles in North America and Europe, and phase out old sets when the games and accessories got out of date and when newer, more advanced games and accessories, took their place.

“thanks to Matt Keller@retrogamingaus.com for a great list to follow, regarding the bundles.”

NES Official Accessories

"http://nintendo.wikia.com/wiki/Nintendo_Entertainment_System"

Nintendo has always been known for manufacturing accessories for their video game consoles, and to this day do so. The NES were chock-full of accessories and peripherals, many of which were bundled with the console (in select sets).

Nintendo of course earned the most profits from accessories since the ones they created were arguably the most useful. Bundled with the console in the Deluxe Set was R.O.B. While not particularly successful, R.O.B. went on to become a Nintendo icon. Nintendo's second big accessory was the NES Zapper. Nintendo got started in the video game industry with light gun peripherals, so it came as no surprise when Nintendo announced a home console version. Nintendo created a variety of other accessories too. The Power Glove is an infamous controller that you placed on your hand. The Power Pad can be considered the predecessor to the Balance Board. It was even advertised as a fitness product, perhaps due to the overwhelming media reports that video games weren't healthy.

License nr.	NES-001

- When Nintendo released the NES in the US, the design styling was deliberately different from that of other game consoles. Nintendo wanted to distinguish its product from those of competitors and to avoid the generally poor reputation that game consoles had acquired following the video game crash of 1983. One result of this philosophy was to disguise the cartridge slot design as a front-loading zero insertion force (ZIF) cartridge socket, designed to resemble the front-loading mechanism of a VCR.

- The NES-101 model of the Nintendo Entertainment System (informally known as the NES 2, the top-loading model, or simply the Top Loader) is a compact, top-loading redesign of the original Nintendo Entertainment System control deck.
- The 10NES authentication chip was completely removed from the system in an effort to eliminate the blinking red power light problem associated with it in the original NES. The removal of the 10NES chip also allows the system to play games that are unlicensed and/or from different regions.

- An RF (Radio Frequency) and microwave switch is a device to route high frequency signal through transmission paths.
- The RF Switch does not produce stereo sound. To get stereo sound, you had to connect your Control Deck to your TV or VCR using the Stereo Audio/Video Cable.

NES Controller

Manufacturer Nintendo
Type Video game controller
License nr. NES-004

- The game controller featured an oblong brick-like design with a simple four button layout: two round buttons labeled “A” and “B”, a “START” button and a “SELECT” button. Additionally, the controllers utilized the cross-shaped joystick, designed by Nintendo employee Gunpei Yokoi for Nintendo Game & Watch systems, to replace the bulkier joysticks on earlier gaming consoles’ controllers.
- In recent years, the original NES controller has become one of the most recognizable symbols of the console. Nintendo has mimicked the look of the controller in several recent products, from promotional merchandise to limited edition versions of the Game Boy Advance.

Manufacturer	Nintendo
Type	Light gun
Release date	October 1985
License nr.	NES-005

- The NES Zapper, also known as The Gun or Beam Gun in Japan, is an electronic light gun accessory for the NES.
- The Famicom version of the Zapper, made for the game Wild Gunman, resembled a revolver-style handgun, but the North American version resembled a futuristic science fiction ray gun with a color scheme matching the NES.

Manufacturer	Nintendo
Type	Video game controller
Release date	(us) October 18, 1985 (eur) September 1, 1986
License nr.	NES-012

- R.O.B. had a short product lifespan, with support for only two games which comprised the “Robot Series”; Gyromite and Stack-Up.
- R.O.B. receives commands via optical flashes in the screen. Once the screen lights up, R.O.B. is ready to receive six commands.
- R.O.B. was available in the Deluxe Set, a configuration for the console that included, among other things, R.O.B. and Gyromite. Stack-Up was purchased separately and included its own physical game pieces.

R.O.B. Robotic Operating Buddy (white)

Manufacturer	ROB Gyromite Attachments

- R.O.B.’s appearance differed in Japan and North America. In each region, Nintendo designed R.O.B. to match the NES or Famicom’s colors. In Japan R.O.B. was red and white, while in every other region it was black and gray.
- In Japan, R.O.B. was sold together with Block Set, while the second and only other R.O.B. game produced, Gyro Set, was sold separately. This was the reverse in the United States where Gyro Set, renamed Gyromite, came packaged with R.O.B. and Block Set, renamed Stack-Up, was sold separately.

- As the Professor character moves through the levels, R.O.B. must aid navigation by raising and lowering red and blue gates. When a Gyro depresses the red pedestal, a lever presses the B button on Controller #2 and red gates are lowered. When a Gyro depresses the blue pedestal, a lever presses the A button on Controller #2 and blue gates are lowered. The action on the screen never stops, so while operating R.O.B., the on-screen character continues to be vulnerable.
- The accessories consist of two claw-like hands, a spinner, a tray that holds an NES Controller, a gyro holder and two gyros.

- In the game, an order is given for the blocks to start off in, and the player must jump on the right buttons to rearrange the discs in the given ending order.
- There exist three variations of this, game, but all function similarly. There is also a function in Stack-Up known as 'Test' mode. once selected, it will send signals to R.O.B.'s eyes, and if he is properly connected, the red LED light on the top of his head will light up.
- The accessories consist of two foam-rounded hands, five pedestals that are attached to R.O.B.'s base and five colored blocks (blue, white, green, yellow, red).

NES Advantage

Manufacturer Nintendo
Type Video game controller
Release date July 1987
License nr. NES-026

- The device is meant to rest on a flat surface at a comfortable level, such as a tabletop or the floor, with the player seated behind it. This way, it could be used like an arcade game joystick—with the left hand using the joystick and the right hand operating the buttons.
- Upon the Advantage's initial release in 1987, it was well received as a great way to get the "arcade experience" at home. Since its successful release in the '80s, the NES advantage has received little media attention, but has continued to be regarded as one of the best NES accessories ever produced.

NES Max

Manufacturer Nintendo
Type Video game controller
Release date July 1988
License nr. NES-027

- Like many later controllers (such as those for the PlayStation and N64), it has "wings": handles that extend from the edges of the pad.
- The NES Max features turbo "A" and "B" buttons in addition to the standard action buttons. There is no adjustment for the turbo rate as there is on the more famous NES Advantage, and the NES Max was known to fail to exceed the NES Advantage's maximum turbo setting. The Max also replaces the D-pad found on standard NES controllers with small button-shaped pad called a cycloid.

Power Pad

Manufacturer	Bandai/Nintendo
Type	Video game controller
Release date	1986
License nr.	NES-028

- The Power Pad (known in Japan as Family Trainer, and in Europe and briefly in the United States as Family Fun Fitness) is a floor mat game controller. It is a gray mat with twelve pressure-sensors embedded between two layers of flexible plastic.
- There are two illustrated sides to the pad: Side A, which is rarely used, has eight buttons, while side B has twelve buttons numbered from 1-12.
- There are 11 games in total which were created for use with the Power Pad. All but one of them were developed and published by Bandai, though some of them were rebranded and republished by Nintendo.

NES Satellite

Manufacturer	Nintendo
Type	Multi-player accessory
Release date	1989
License nr.	NES-032

- The Satellite allows up to four players to play the NES anywhere in the room without the necessity of wires running from the NES to the players' controllers. While a normal controller has a range of 3 feet, the NES Satellite expanded the usable range to 15 feet.
- The main Satellite unit is powered by 6 C-cell batteries and must have a line of sight to the receiver. The unit has four controller ports which could accommodate any type of wired NES controllers. The unit includes "Turbo" selectors for both the A and B buttons.

Four Score

Manufacturer	Nintendo
Type	Multi-player accessory
Release date	1990
License nr.	NES-034

- On the Four Score, there is an option to switch between two-player and four-player modes and turbo A and B buttons that give any of the connected controllers a turbo boost. The Four Score can also be used as a controller extension cable because the wire which leads from the accessory to the NES is several feet in length.
- The Four Score is similar to the earlier NES Satellite.

Dogbone Joypad

Manufacturer	Nintendo
Type	Video game controller
Release date	1993
License nr.	NES-039

- When the Top Loader was released, the design of the game controllers was also changed. These were officially known as NES-039 model controllers and informally known as “dogbone” controllers. They were packaged with the system and also sold separately. The controllers were restyled to resemble the SNES controller, with rounded edges that fit more ergonomically in the hands than the old rectangular design (NES-004). The NES-039 model controller does not fit in R.O.B.’s controller slot because of this ergonomic change. The A and B buttons were also set at an angle to mimic the SNES controller as well as provide better ergonomics.

HFC

Manufacturer	Nintendo
Type	Video game controller
Release date	1989

- A hands free controller designed specifically for people with physical limitations and special needs. It was worn like a vest, uses puff and sipping motions on a straw for the A and B buttons, and a chin stick for directional movement.
- This product was offered exclusively through Nintendo’s consumer service number and was not sold in stores. The price was for $179.

Turbo Blaster

Manufacturer Nintendo
Type Video game controller accessories

- The Turbo Blaster is an adaptor that made a regular NES controller into a turbo controller.
- It has the option for fine tuning the intensity of the turbo. It also has a button for slow-mo.

NES Cleaning Kit

Manufacturer Nintendo
Type Video game accessory
Release date 1989
License nr. NES-030 + NES-031

- The NES Cleaning Kit is a cleaning kit that is used to remove dust and dirt from the connectors inside of the NES and the NES cartridges, which helps to keep the system and cartridges working properly and eliminates flashing screens and graphical flickering during gameplay.
- It consists of a “cleaning wand” to clean the cartridges with, a “cleaning cartridge” used to clean the system, and replacement cleaning surfaces for both the wand and the cartridge.

Top Loading 8-bit Famicom Unit

Manufacturer Nintendo
Type Video game system
Release date 1993
License nr. HVC-101

- The HVC-101 model of the Family Computer was a redesign of the original Famicom video game console. It was marketed as the Family Computer, exactly the same title as the original, but users called it the AV Famicom or New Famicom to distinguish it from the original system. Like the original model, it is commonly referred to by the nickname “Famicom”. It was stylistically similar to the NES-101 model released in North America at roughly the same time. It was produced until September 2003.

NES Controllers

This list of Nintendo controllers consist of 3rd party products. Both licensed and unlicensed. These controllers are just some of many hundreds different controllers that was released for the NES. 3rd party peripherals are still fairly cheap to collect.

The standard NES controllers were more-or-less copied directly from the Game & Watch machines, although the Famicom design team originally wanted to use arcade-style joysticks, even taking apart ones from American game consoles to see how they worked. However, it was eventually decided that children might step on joysticks left on the floor and their durability was also questioned.

Nintendo sued many of the companies that made unlicensed peripherals for the NES. Camerica and their USA distributor, Galoob Toy was one of many that they sued. But the companies often prevailed and Nintendo had to pay in damages over lawsuits.

Beeshu, Inc.

Beeshu, Inc. was a video game accessory manufacturer headquartered in the United States. Beeshu's president was Don Shulman.

They primarily made products for the Nintendo Entertainment System, and also released a few accessories for Sega and Atari products.

They apparently released only one joystick for the Sega Master System. In some Sega Team Newsletters, they had a full-page add for various Beeshu controllers. The design was similar to what was released for the NES, except that they were apparently never released, except for one, the Ultimate Superstick. The joystick may only be a prototype. Beeshu had a lawsuit against Sega and the plans for a new line of joysticks for the system went away.

The company filed for bankruptcy in 1995.

Zipper Joypad Series

Manufacturer Beeshu
Type Video game controller

- Produced by Beeshu, the Zipper was a turbo joypad which was identical to the Turbo Tech Controller. It allows for the input of a joystick handle into the directional pad.

Zoomer Flight Wheel

Manufacturer Beeshu
Type Video game controller
License nr. #20822

- The Zoomer was essentially a joystick made for flying games and racing games, such as Top Gun, Flight of the Intruder and Rad Racer.
- The Zoomer also had a feature that slowed down the gameplay, reminiscent of another accessory, the NES Advantage, as well as a button that allowed the player to fire at enemies automatically.
- The Zoomer received negative reception, due to the fact that the joystick along with many other similar joysticks of the time broke quite easily.

Ultimate Superstick

Manufacturer Beeshu
Type Video game controller

- Ultimate Superstick comes equipped with all the standard features including rapid fire and slow motion settings. Two dials on the top-left of the joystick control the rapid fire. The Superstick also attempts to accommodate left handed players by placing both A and B buttons on either side of the base. Suction cups on the bottom keep it from moving around.
- The joystick uses micro switches in order to operate. Micro switches are no longer commonly used in the making of joysticks.

webring.org

Quickfire Zinger Series

Manufacturer Beeshu
Type Video game controller

- A good joystick from Beeshu which featured a quick fire switch at the front. The Zinger series has a nice grip and is arguably the best joystick made for the NES. It is also a Nintendo licensed product.

QuickShot

QuickShot was a line of joysticks and other input devices produced by Spectravideo for video game machines and home computers including Atari, Commodore, NES, Amiga, Amstrad, Sega and more.

The world's first ergonomic joystick, the QuickShot, was developed and patented by Harry Fox and Peter Law in 1982.

Relatively famous was its Quickshot Maverick joystick, compatible with multiple consoles and home computers. In the late 1990s they expanded their line of products to PC joysticks and mouse.

During the 1990s the company marketed a handheld game console called the Quickshot Supervision, a UK version of an Asian console designed to compete with the Nintendo Game Boy.

Today the Spectravideo name is used by a UK-based company called SpectraVideo Plc, formerly known as Ash & Newman. That company was founded in 1977, and bought the Spectravideo brand name from Bondwell in 1988.

Maverick 2

Manufacturer	Quickshot
Type	Video game controller
Release date	1990
License nr.	QS-128N

- Black arcade stick similar to the NES Advantage. Features rapid-fire, slow-mo, and player 1 /player 2 toggle switch. Suction cups on the bottom provide a steady gaming platform.
- The main problem with the Maverick 2 controller is that there are many different controllers that are modeled on the NES Advantage, and it is more poorly made than some other NES Advantage clones.

Flight Grip 2

Manufacturer	Quickshot
Type	Video game controller
Release date	1991
License nr.	QS-129N

- A very unusable design - you grip the controller with both hands like a flight stick, and the buttons are on top.
- The main problem with the Flightgrip controller is that the unique design that it is recognized for is very different from normal controllers and is subsequently rather difficult to use and get used to. The player's arms will grow tired after using the Flightgrip controller for a relatively short amount of time, and it is difficult to simultaneously press the A button and pull the B button.

"nesdb.tripod.com"

Python 2

Manufacturer	Quickshot
Type	Video game controller
Release date	1989
License nr.	QS-130NL

- The Python 2 is an ergonomic joystick with a moulded grip and buttons on the top and a trigger button. It has micro switches which give a satisfying click when the stick is moved. It has 4 stabilising suction cups on base for adhering to hard surface.
- On a drawback note, the cord is very short.

XXI Joyball

Manufacturer	Quickshot
Type	Video game controller
License nr.	QS-121

- The Quickshot Trackball is an unlicensed controller designed for a number of gaming consoles. The joystick is often confused with a trackball due to the similar shape, however its design is not a complete sphere, but a large dome attached to a switching mechanism that slides forward, backward, left, and right. The Quickshot can be changed from right to left hand use via a slider switch on the side of the unit. Like most non-standard NES controllers of the time, it was difficult to work properly, as games usually were not designed with it in mind. An exception is Marble Madness, which turned out to be a natural match for the controller.

Intruder 2

Manufacturer	Quickshot
Type	Video game controller
License nr.	QS-148

- The Intruder 2 is a third-party flight stick.
- It is one of QuickShot's "multi-controller" peripherals, and so is compatible not only with a range of home computers of the era (save for the IBM PC, which requires an Intruder 5), but for the Sega Master System as well. A three button Sega Mega Drive version exists as the Intruder 3.

Aviator 2

Manufacturer Quickshot
Type Video game controller
License nr. QS-153

- Designed specifically for flying simulation games, the Quickshot Aviator boasted an altitude level indicator in the centre.
- It features turbo A and B buttons, a “slowdown” switch (turbo Start-button switch), and a suction base that keeps the controller steady on your table while playing.

Controller (QS-127)

Manufacturer Quickshot
Type Video game controller
License nr. QS-127

- The Wireless Controller from QuickShot is, as the name suggests, a wireless third-party controller. It was built for the Sega Master System, and is very similar to the Starfighter 3W in design. The package bundled two controllers with a receiver, and also has extra leads for the NES.
- The official name of this peripheral is not currently known, however its code name is QS-127. In Brazil it was licensed by Tectoy as an official product.

“segaretro.org”

WizMaster

Manufacturer Quickshot
Type Video game controller
Release date 1988
License nr. QS-118

- This wireless controller has various adapters that would plug into the back of the controller. It came with a packaged remote adapter, but others could be purchased separately. The Wizmaster also came packaged with an arcade game-style joystick that would attach to the directional pad.

Joypad

Manufacturer	Quickshot
Type	Video game controller
Release date	1990
License nr.	QS-126

- The weird Joypad is a unique NES thumbpad controller that gives you somewhat the feel of using a track pad. It is like a joystick without the stick. Manipulate direction with a slight touch of your thumb or finger on the pad. On opposite sides this controller the A and B buttons are located, and there is an autofire on/off switch that can control both. The Select and Start switches are on a designed toggle bar.

"nesrepairshop.com"

Camerica

Camerica was a Canadian publisher famous for publishing unlicensed games and accessories for the NES. They manufactured two NES arcade sticks, the Turbotronic and the Freedom Stick, and were sued by Nintendo due to their similarities to the NES Advantage.

Camerica released numerous Codemasters developed titles for the NES in shiny gold and silver cartridges. An interesting feature of these cartridges was a switch on the underside that allowed for playing the cartridges in both European and North American NES systems.

Camerica also manufactured Codemasters' Game Genie cheat code device, which was marketed and distributed by Galoob. Nintendo sued them over the Game Genie as well, but lost the case. Five million Game Genies across multiple platforms were eventually sold. In 1993 Camerica released a peripheral for the NES called the Aladdin Deck Enhancer. This was a device that allowed special unlicensed cartridges to be used on the NES. The cartridges were smaller than traditional NES cartridges, so Camerica hoped that this would allow them to manufacture game cartridges at a lower cost.

"giantbomb.com"

Turbotronic

Manufacturer	Camerica
Type	Video game controller

- This is the product that supposedly got Camerica broke. Nintendo had tried to sue them for a long time but couldn't do it before they made the mistake of manufacturing a copy of Nintendo's "NES Advantage".
- The controller can be connected to both of the ports on the NES at the same time due to the double cord. A switch changes between Player one and two.
- When the A or B button is pushed, an LED light flashes. Which for some, may be an annoying distraction.

Supersonic Triangle Wireless Joystick

Manufacturer Camerica
Type Video game controller
License nr. CAC-285

- The Supersonic Joystick is quite unusual in form. It is triangular in shape, and places the joystick itself right in the center of the device. It also has 'A' and 'B' buttons on both sides of the joystick. This is designed to make it comfortable for both right-handed and left-handed people to play. There is a switch to flip for the set of buttons you wish to use. There is also a switch for first and second players if you wish to pass the joystick in a two-player (non-simultaneous) game. Whenever you push the buttons, a row of lights flashes.

"tnca.myrmid.com"

Freedom Pad

Manufacturer Camerica
Type Video game controller
License nr. CAC-300

- The Freedom Pad consists of one controller and one infrared receiver that can plug into one or both controller ports on the NES. The controller features adjustable turbofire to help keep players from having to make rapid button presses, as well as a rounded directional pad to help ease the effects of "Nintendo thumb" on players' hands.
- The controller is slightly thicker than a regular NES Controller, and can be awkward to use if the player isn't used to it.

Freedom Stick

Manufacturer Camerica
Type Video game controller
Release date 1990
License nr. CAC-260

- The Freedom Stick is a multi-system joystic compatible with NES, Sega, Atari and the commodore.
- The joystick has automatic rapid fire with 8 direction precision micro action and is also wireless.

NiProPad

Manufacturer QJ
Type Video game controller
License nr. SV-330

- The company QJ developed the NiPROPAD as an alternative to the regular Nintendo controller. The design of the pad has a positive first impression. The curves ensure that the pad is comfortable in the hand. In terms of size, the third-party product is suitable for both small as well as large hands. Although at first, it seems to be some distance between the A and B button, the user should quickly get used to it. Something unusual, but still easily accessible are the top-placed buttons Select and Start. A criticism about the gamepad was the slightly noisy button noises, which occur due to the hollow housing.

Game

Manufacturer Recoton
Type Video game controller
Release date 1994

- Like many other unlicensed NES controllers, the Game has a few extra functions that are not found on the NES Controller, but it is more poorly made.
- The Game controller is packaged on a cardboard backing that has instructions printed on the back.
- The Game controller seems to have a slight delay in response time to input, which can be a serious problem with many games that require the player to perform well-timed actions.

Family Fun Fitness pad

Manufacturer Bandai
Type Video game controller
Release date 1986
License nr. #07188

- Bandai first released the accessory in 1986 as the Family Trainer pack for the Famicom in Japan, and later released in the United States under the name Family Fun Fitness. Quickly after the games were sent to stores, Nintendo bought up the North American rights to the Family Fun and Fitness pad, repackaging and rereleasing it as the Nintendo Power Pad.

The Double Player

Manufacturer	Acclaim
Type	Video game controller

- Double Player is a set of two wireless controllers for the NES created by Acclaim. It utilizes infrared technology. To work, the controllers must point at a receiver plugged into the NES. The signal is said to be read from up to 30 feet away. But users inform that the radius was very limited and playing with them required a steady hand at all times.
- Like most other controllers, it includes twin turbo rapid-fire and a slow motion mode. The slow motion mode is made where the game would rapidly pause and unpause.

Uforce

Manufacturer	Broderbund
Type	Video game controller
License nr.	#91141

- The U-Force employs a pair of perpendicular consumer IR sensor panels to translate the user's hand movements into controller signals.
- The U-Force was ranked the eighth worst video game controller by IGN editor Craig Harris. MSN listed it as one of the top 10 worst game peripherals, writing "Second only to the Sega Activator in terms of all-out crappiness, the U-Force also used infrared sensors to create a truly nightmarish controller... 'Don't Touch' said the adverts for the device, in a rare example of an advertising campaign that got it spot on."

Miracle Piano Keyboard System

Manufacturer Mindscape
Type Video game controller
Release date 1990

- The Miracle Piano Teaching System is a MIDI keyboard/teaching tool.
- The Nintendo Seal of Quality on these boards was covered up with a piece of plastic.
- The Miracle Piano did not ever generate sounds from the NES hardware; all NES MIDI information was converted into audio by the instrument's built-in ROM and played through the instrument's stereo speakers, allowing the keyboard to be used independently of the console.

- Versions of the software were made available for the PC, Macintosh, SNES, Amiga and Sega Genesis, both separately and with the hardware.
- Although relatively rare, conversion kits which included the software for use with an already owned Miracle keyboard were purchasable. It allowed one to convert the game system versions to PC or Mac.
- Items included the Users Guide, an Owners Manuel, 1 set of 3.5 inch floppy disks and a Original Miracle conversion cable.

Dominator Master Control

Manufacturer Nexoft
Type Video game controller
License nr. 2010

- Master Control makes any Nintendo compatible accessory wireless and features Adjustable Turbo or slow action with instantaneous response.
- Dominator Master Control comes with a MasterControl Receiver and allow remote game play from a distance of up to 18 feet. The receiver allows the user to plug two controllers into it to make them both wireless.
- The joystick requires 4 AA Batteries.

Power Glove

Manufacturer Mattel/PAX
Type Video game controller
Release date 1989

- The Power Glove was not popular and was criticized for its imprecise and difficult-to-use controls.
- Though it was an officially licensed product, Nintendo was not involved in the design or release of this accessory. Rather, it was designed by Grant Goddard and Samuel Cooper Davis for Abrams Gentile Entertainment (AGE), made by Mattel in the United States and PAX in Japan.
- Two games were released with specific features for use with the Power Glove: Super Glove Ball and Bad Street Brawler.

Power Glove Sensors

Manufacturer Mattel/PAX
Type Video game controller accessory
Release date 1989

- The sensors in the Power Glove are based on optical fibers that are scratched near the bending joint to cause it to transmit less light when bent, an innovation developed by Young L. Harvill of VPL Research. There are two ultrasonic speakers (transmitters) in the glove and three ultrasonic microphones (receivers) around the TV monitor. The ultrasonic speakers take turns transmitting a short burst (a few pulses) of 40 kHz sound and the system measures the time it takes for the sound to reach the microphones. A triangulation calculation is performed to determine the X, Y, Z location of each of the two speakers, which specifies the yaw and roll of the hand.

Competition Pro STAR

Manufacturer Happ Controls
Type Video game controller

- The Original Competition Pro made by Kempston Micro Electronics was primary designed to work with the ZX Spectrum, but also with other home computers such as the Amstrad CPC, Commodore 64 and later Commodore Amiga and Atari ST.
- The Competition Pro Star for the NES is a somewhat rare joystick. The joysticks are the preferred joysticks for many Amiga users because of Happ Control's high quality. All Stars have a transparent-blue plastic base and a silver joystick/buttons.

Arkanoid Controller

Manufacturer Taito
Type Video game controller

- The Arkanoid Controller, or Vaus, is an optional game controller for the NES game Arkanoid which enhances the feel and play of the game.
- The Vaus controller is constructed from the same gray plastic as the standard NES controller and is roughly the same size and shape. It has one black button at the top, a black spinner below, an adjustment port, as well as an embossed Taito logo and a raised Arkanoid logo on the front.
- The Vaus was offered for sale packaged with Arkanoid in 1986, but neither the game nor the controller were available individually for purchase. It is one of only a few NES games that came in a non-standard box due to an accessory.

Explorer I

Manufacturer Honyü
Type Video game controller

- Explorer I seems to be patterned after the NES Advantage Joystick, as it has all the functions that the NES Advantage has. With a variety of buttons, it has an extra plug so that two players can play with the same joystick. One player plays, and then alternates with the other by trading off the controller using the player 2 switch. The turbo-fire option puts adjustable, repeat firing power at your fingertips. There are two Turbo Fire controller knobs, one for both the “A” and “B” buttons. This is also adjustable (on the fly) with a light that blinks fast or slow to visually illustrate where your TF speed setting is. Another handy option is the slow-motion feature. When used in certain games it allows you to slow the action down to have an advantage in difficult parts or stages of many games.

Roll & Rocker

Manufacturer LJN
Type Video game controller

“YOU become the directional control pad!”

- The Roll ‘n Rocker was a strange plastic peripheral which had a ball underneath it. It let the user control their character by standing on it and tilting from side to side. To use the A, B, Start, and Select buttons, you plugged a controller into the front of the device.
- The controllers was compatible with pretty much every NES game out there. Problem is, if you weighed more than 100lbs it would likely snap under your feet.

Epyx 500XJ

Manufacturer Konix
Type Video game controller
License nr. 500XJ

- The popular Epyx 500XJ Joystick was widely touted by many as one of the most revolutionary joysticks of the time. It used high-quality microswitches and a more ergonomic form factor than many of the other joysticks.
- An awkward thing about the joystick is the button placement: repeatedly hitting the button by “curling” your index finger upward can get painful fast.
- The Joystick is also known as “Speedking” or 500XJ.

Mega

Manufacturer Bandai
Type Video game controller
Release date 1987
License nr. CAC-260

- The Bandai Mega controller includes a built in LCD screen that displays the active functions, and a built in game.
- The modes included are: MEGA Control Pad Lock (“Locks-down” Control Pad in any selected direction.), A & B Button Locks, Rapid Fire Mode, Slow-Mo Mode, Game 1 Mode (A built-in challenge game. This game challenges you to press the A and B buttons as rapidly as possible during a 10 second period.), Arsenal Mode (number of times you are allowed to press each button.), Timer Mode, Memory Mode (Memorizes “password” sequences.) and Top Secret Mode (Built in game).

N-Pro

Manufacturer QuickJoy
Type Video game controller
License nr. SV-305

- On the joypad there’s a small “screen” with 6 small red led lights, which will light up when you move the stick or press fire, the feature can be switched off.
- The stick has 3 different Auto-Fire modes. The joystick works for both right and left handed people. Also on the bottom side of the joypad is a small lid, leading to a small room inside the joystick, but this is for absolutely no use at all.

Turbo Touch 360

Manufacturer Triax
Type Video game controller
Release date 1992

- The Turbo Touch 360 is a series of aftermarket third-party controllers made by Triax for the NES, SNES, and Sega Genesis. What separated them from other controllers on the market was the fact that instead of a D-pad, they had a touch-sensitive panel, much like the touchpad on a modern notebook computer. The idea was to reduce repetitive strain injury to the player.
- Other than the touchpad, the controllers had a standard set of features for controllers of the time, with turbo support.
- The controller was ranked the ninth worst video game controller by IGN editor Craig Harris.

Joycard Audio Joypad

Manufacturer Sansui
Publisher Hudson
Type Video game controller
License nr. HC66-7

- An alternate title for the joypad is Joy Cart Sansui SSS.
- The Joycard Sansui SSS is a heavy controller, weighing in at almost double a standard NES controller, and designed to be more similar to a Famicom controller than an NES controller it has a very special aspect. The weight is because of the sound processing hardware inside of the controller. By plugging the red RCA plug into the red port on the side of the NES and headphones into the controller itself, you will hear pseudo stereo sound from your mono NES.

Starmaster

Manufacturer Kraft
Type Video game controller

- Instead of a trigger, it has a button on the top of the stick. The B button is on the base along with the start and select buttons. It has four suction cup feet below the base, allowing the joystick to be temporarily attached to a table top for single hand operation.
- The Starmaster came out for several different game systems, most notably for the Atari 2600.

Cheetah Joystick Series

Publisher	Carolco
Manufacturer	Cheetah
Type	Video game controller
Release date	1992

Cheetah CharacteriStick range:

- Alien 3 Joystick
- Bart Simpson Joystick
- Batman Returns Joystick
- Batman The Animated Series Joystick
- Terminator Joystick

Considering their rarity, they were likely not very popular and few were actually sold. Good for display perhaps, but not for anything else.

Grip•it

Manufacturer	Richwide Tech
Type	Video game controller
License nr.	G-101

- The Grip It is a one-handed Nintendo controller. It has six buttons and a motion sensor, were the direction you move your control is the direction you moves on the screen. There a also 2 LED lights on the top.
- A feature on the Grip It is a special plug, were one side fits into a Nintendo and the other is used for the Sega Genesis.

The Game Handler

Manufacturer IMN Control
Type Video game controller
License nr. GH-001

- The Game Handler was a strange controller which allowed the user to play the NES using one hand. It featured turbo buttons, slow motion and also let you do certain things in games like make Mario run backwards.
- Included with the Game Handler was a VHS instructional video. It consisted of tips and videos from NES games on how to play using the controller. The VHS is about 10 minutes long and can be seen in its entirety on youtube.

Hotseat game chair

Manufacturer POWER INC.
Type Video game controller

- A large “seat” controller made entirely in plastic, with attached flight-stick style joystick. The stick really only emulates the buttons on a NES pad, while the movements you make in the seat control the directions (rock left to steer left, Rock forward to move up, ect..). On the right arm rest there is what resembles a joystick with several buttons. “Run” works as a Start button, “A” is an index finger trigger, “B” on the thumb button. It also has a “Select” and a “Turbo” switch.
- The black version are considered harder to find.

The Mothership

Manufacturer Suncom
Type Video game controller
License nr. NMS-003

- The Mothership from Suncom turns a standard NES controller into joystick.
- From the joysticks original box:

“The Mothership Story. You’ve never played until you’ve played with Mother Ship! Unique in all the universe, Mother Ship envelopes and fully conceals Nintendo’s own, original, rectangular box hand controller. By converting to an aircraft-style, pistol grip joystick with Mother Ship, you’ll enjoy higher scores, easier play and greater comfort than you’ve ever had before.”

NES Controller Accessories

This is two small pages of list of Accessories for Nintendo controllers. Both licensed and unlicensed. Controller accessories are items that enhance or change a NES controller.

Most of the items here are only usable for the regular NES-004 controller.

Super Extendo

Manufacturer Curtis/Nuby Manufacturing Co
Type Video game controller accessories
License nr. NC-1

- Super Extendo is just a extension cable for you controller. The user take one end and plug it into the NES console, and the other end to the cord coming out of your controller.
- The box includes two 6 feet extension cables

Power Grips

Manufacturer Dynasound Organizer
Type Video game controller accessories

- Power Grips are placed onto a regular NES Controller to help make the controller more comfortable to hold. The Power Grips can be stretched to fit on several controllers that are similar in shape and size to the NES Controller, but they fit and function best on the standard NES Controller.
- A problem with the Power Grips is that they tend to slip off of the NES Controller if the player grips them too powerfully.
- They are fairly hard to find making them a collectible item.

Super Controller

Manufacturer Bandai
Type Video game controller accessory
Release date 1987
License nr. 06219

- The Super Controller was a plastic clip-on device that was supposed to allow the player to have a better NES playing experience. The original NES controller could be inserted inside by snapping open the back. The Super Controller still allowed the player to use the original A, B, Start, and Select buttons on the NES controller; the only difference was an arcade stick-like knob that fit over the D-pad of the original NES controller.
- This accessory for the NES was never really considered to be successful, also considering the fact that there were better first- and third-party controllers.

Freedom Connection

Manufacturer Camerica
Type Video game controller accessory
Release date 1988
License nr. CAC-267

- The Freedom Connection allows you to turn any controller into a wireless controller. This is done by plugging your controller into the main piece, and aiming it at the sensor, which you plug in your NES. It also has a 1P/2P switch that allows for passing the controller as well.
- The Freedom Connection is packaged in a box and includes one receiver, one transmitter, and an instruction manual.

Doc's Fix-A-Pad

Type Video game controller accessories

- As the NES system ages or is heavily played, buttons and parts may begin to wear out. Causing cross directional, A & B, and Start & Select switches to stop working. Fix-A-Pad contains the parts necessary to rebuild 2 Nintendo controllers including a controller screw driver and how-to directions.
- The package shows the kit coming with four yellow buttons, two orange d-pads, and black screwdriver. But it is known to be several different variants of colors. The accessories also came in either cardboard packaging or a plastic shell case.

NES Light-Gun

A light gun works where it has a single light sensor in the tip, which picks up light from the part of the screen it is aimed at. Given that the CRT TVs used at the time essentially instantaneously displayed the signal sent from the console, this was quite sufficient.

When the trigger is pulled, the console would display a flash of light from the location of each target in sequence. Whichever flash produced a pulse from the sensor indicated a hit target.

All of this is fundamentally dependent on the low-persistence nature of CRTs: each location on the screen emits light only when the input signal passes them as it sweeps out the entire image. This is very different from modern LCD displays, where each individual pixel is a device which changes state between passing or blocking light from the backlight, and the timing of the display change is dependent on the internal digital processing in the display.

Videoblaster

Manufacturer Camerica
Type Light Gun

- The Video Blaster is light weight, and it is designed to look like a six shooter gun, complete with a pull down hammer that you can cock back for single shots.
- The light gun also has an striking ressembles to the FamiCom revolver-style handgun.
- The Videoblaster is a rare item. It may come from the cause that it looks like a "real" gun, with only a orange part at the inside of the tip.

ProBeam

Manufacturer Nexoft
Type Light Gun
License nr. 2000

- The Dominator ProBeam universal wireless infra-red lightgun video system is a item that turns your NES into a wire-less remote controlled System.
- The light-gun has a scope with cross hairs and a custom chip technology that allows instantaneous scoring.
- It features futuristic styling and easy grip for two handed shot control.
- The Light Gun is licensed by Nintendo.

Laserscope Headset

Manufacturer Konami
Type Light Gun

- The Konami LaserScope is a head-mounted light gun. Laserscope originally released the peripheral in 1990, for the Famicom under the name Gun Sight.
- The LaserScope was manufactured specifically for one Konami game, Laser Invasion, but could be used with any game that used the NES Zapper as a peripheral.
- The system did not use an actual gun, but instead was a headset with a microphone and a laser-guided crosshair that covered one eye. The LaserScope was powered through the audio port of the NES, which enabled the user to hear the game audio as well. All a user was required to do was say “fire” and the gun, supposedly, would fire at the target.

Video Shooter

Manufacturer Placo
Type Light Gun
License nr. 2000

- The Video Shooter is cordless, and it has a built in scope though not as large as the Probeam's scope. The Video Shooter runs on 4 AA batteries, and every time you pull the trigger a red light lights up in the back.
- A problem the Video Shooter have, is that the reciever doesn't work very well, making it hard to succeed in the zapper games using this lightgun.

Scope

Publisher SVI
Manufacturer Quickshot
Type Light Gun accessories
License nr. QS-132

- The Quickshot sighting scope is an accessory produced originally by Quickshot Supervision. The full title of the scope is: QuickShot QS-132 Sighting scope. It is also known as a Deluxe Sighting Scope. The scope itself in a greyish colour and is very detailed with fake screws.
- The Quick shot sighting scope clicks onto the Nintendo zapper quite easily. The plastic plugs click into the zappers' holes. The scope has an adjustment mechanism which is even rarer than the scope itself. Finding a complete scope and adjuster is hard.

NES Hardware Enhancer

A hardware enhancer can be seen as bypassing the security circuit chip or getting codes from a game. These pages consist of some of the more known NES hardware enhancers.

Cheat devices like the Game Genie worked by finding locations in the game code, then insert new numbers into them. So by finding “How Many Lives Left” in Super Mario Bros., the user could switch the standard number of lives with a much bigger number, and play the game with effectively infinite lives.

A software changer/enhancer involving bypassing the lock-out chip was made for playing unlicensed games or games from other regions. The more populare of the lock-out bypass was probably the Aladdin Deck Enhancer. The idea behind it was to provide a cheaper means with which to make the game cartridges, mainly because each cartridge requires its own 10NES lock-out chip, RAM and extra circuitry. Camerica was one of the major purveyors of unlicensed NES games, so the Deck Enhancer was a logical creation for them. Also, since the slot for the actual game was much smaller, less material was needed to produce a cartridge.

Game Action Replay

Manufacturer	STD
Type	Video game accessories
Release date	1991
License nr.	SV-801

- What this cart does is that it allows the user to save in almost any game and at any point in the game they wish to save.
- The cart does not fit a regular NES system. Also, the program that runs the Game Action Replay, was stored in some sort of RAM, which was powered by a battery included in the cartridge. Once this battery run dry the Game Action Replay wouldn't be much more than a piece of plastic.

“nesworld.com”

Pro Action Replay

Manufacturer	Datel
Type	Video game accessories

- The Pro Action Replay was Datels answer to Codemasters Game Genie. The Action Replay certainly wasn't nearly as popular as the Game Genie brand back in the NES days, due to poor distribution and code availability.
- It was designed and manufactured by Datel Electronics Ltd in the UK.
- The Pro Action Replay came packaged with a small code book featuring codes for 19 popular NES titles. While the Game Genie came with a code book of over 290 games, it does not come with a “Trainer”. The Pro Action Replay does. The “Trainer” may be accessed from the menu screen and enables the user to discover new codes for any game.

10 pin to cart dongle

Manufacturer HES
Type Software changer

- The HES Unidaptor is a video game adapter which allows any NES console game to be operated on any NES hardware despite the 10NES region security chip. The original HES Unidaptor is quite a bulky device with a cartridge that slips into the NES unit, and straps over the top of the NES. The component that lies atop of the NES has three slots. Slot 1 is the master slot which is where the user inserts an official licensed NES game compatible with the NES hardware so that the 10NES chip can read the country code from the master's EPROM. The others, Slot 2 and Slot 3 (called the slaves), allowed the user to insert either a 72-pin NTSC/PAL cartridge to play or a 60-pin Famicom respectively.

Unidaptor MKII

Manufacturer HES
Type Software changer

- The more refined and cheaper version of the HES Unidaptor was released, with more similar in appearance to HES games. It was simply a cartridge that slotted into the NES, which had two 'Piggy back' slots (the bottom being the master and the top being the slave).
- This unit only supported 72-pin NTSC/PAL cartridges.
- A problem that the Unidaptor MKII has is that the cartridge becomes top-heavy once the local and foreign games are connected to it, and this can put some strain on both the Unidaptor MKII itself as well as the connectors on the inside of the system.

Aladdin Deck Enhancer

Developer Codemasters
Manufacturer Camerica
Type Software changer
Release date 1992

- The Aladdin Deck Enhancer is a cartridge based system that allows software on Compact Cartridges to be played on the NES.
- It was had a planned library to reach a total 24 games by the end of 1993. However, only seven games were actually released.
- The idea behind the Aladdin Deck Enhancer was to provide a cheaper means with which to make the game cartridges mainly because each cartridge requires its own 10NES lock-out chip, RAM and extra circuitry.

Game Key Lockout chip bypass

Manufacturer Horelec
Type Video game accessories

- The GameKey was packed with a UK or American game and was sold for around US$25.
- The GameKey does have its compatibility problems with some US carts.
- You use a game that matches the region of the console in the back slot and put the game that you want to play in the front slot. It basically takes the pins from the back unit to match up the lockout chip. This is also a way of getting around some color dream games that might put an unnecessary shock to your system.

Game Genie adapter for top load NES (black)

Manufacturer Camerica
Publisher Galoob
Type Game software accessory
Release date 1993

- The game genie had a thicker card to help with worn contacts on the front loader nes. This is also why it doesn't work with the top loader, the connector cannot handle the thicker card unless you really force it in, but this may damage the connector. Galoob made an adapter to fix this, it was free, all you had to do was ask for it.
- The adaptor is considered rare by collectors and often goes for a high price on ebay.com.

Game Genie

Manufacturer Galoob
Type Video game accessories
License nr. 7356

- The Game Genie was a device shaped like an NES cartridge cut in half that when used allowed the player to enter "codes" which modified the game data allowing the player to cheat. It was attached to the end of an NES game and the whole assembly was then inserted into the NES. The codes had many effects, most often giving the player some form of invulnerability or infinite ammo or some such modification. The codes came in a little booklet shipped with the Game Genie, but now all of these and many more discovered or created by players can be found online. There are whole websites dedicated to just Game Genie codes.

The NES had alot of weird accessories.
These two pages consist of a small sample of the more known NES accessories.

3D Glasses

Type Video game accessories

- These glasses were available from an offer shown in the Nintendo Fun Club News #4 - Winter 1987. It required you to send in a coupon, a UPC from the Rad Racer box as well as a couple of tips on playing Rad Racer. The offer was eventually discontinued.

Teleplay modem

Manufacturer Baton
Type Video game accessories
Release date 1993

- The Teleplay Modem was a modem for the NES created by Keith Rupp and Nolan Bushnell, designed to provide online play between NES users, while also possessing compatibility with the Sega Genesis and Super Nintendo.
- The first prototype, called the Ayota Modem, had a maximum speed of only 300 bit/s, too slow to render normal NES quality graphics. It was unveiled at the 1992 consumer electronics show in Las Vegas, where it received a fairly good reception.
- Three games were developed internally (Battle Storm, Terran Wars and Sea Battle) but never released. Both Nintendo and Sega refused to license the Teleplay Modem or the games developed for it.

Homework First combination NES lock

Manufacturer Master Lock Co.
Type Video game system accessories
Release date 1989

- In 1989, an Illinois based company called Safe Care Products created the Homework First Lock; a combination lock designed to help regulate unauthorized Nintendo usage. In fact, the idea for the product came about when Safe Care president, Tom Lowe, heard that a friend's son "stayed up all night playing Nintendo instead of studying for his finals." This device was never licensed by Nintendo, however Lowe managed to sell a few thousand of these units by phone and toy stores, with the help of endorsements from The Council for Children's Television and Media.

GameSounds Remote Headphones

Manufacturer Lightwave Tech.
Type Video game system accessories
Release date 1991
License nr. #GEX103

- An alternate Title is "GameSounds Receiver".
- Gamesounds is a very rare remote headphone headset for the NES, that doubles as a FM Radio. This is a official Nintendo Licensed head set device that connects to your NES' AV ports.

GameSounds System Package

Manufacturer Lightwave Tech.
Type Video game system accessories
Release date 1991
License nr. #GAM102

- The gamesounds system package contains one receiver and one transmitter.
- want to play with a friend, or two, or more? No problem! Just add-on extra receiver packages at any time. When you add-on extra receivers, no extra transmitter is needed. And you can add as many receivers as you like, because gamesounds work cordlessly.
- Receiver had reach of over 20 feet.

NES Clone Systems

Owing to the popularity and longevity of the NES, the system has become one of the world's most cloned video game consoles. Such clones are colloquially called Famiclones (a portmanteau of "Famicom" and "clone"), and are electronic hardware devices designed to replicate the workings of, and play games designed for, the NES. Hundreds of unauthorized clones and unlicensed copies have been made available since the height of the NES popularity in the late 1980s. The technology employed in such clones has evolved over the years: while the earliest clones featured a printed circuit board containing custom or third party integrated circuits (ICs), more recent (post-1996) clones have utilized single chip designs, with a custom ASIC which simulates the functionality of the original hardware, and often includes one or more on-board games. Most devices originate in Asian nations, especially China and Taiwan, and to a lesser extent South Korea.

In some locales, especially South America, South Africa, and the former Soviet Union, where the NES was never officially released by Nintendo, such clones were the only readily available console gaming systems.

Elsewhere, such systems could occasionally even be found side by side with official Nintendo hardware, often prompting swift legal action.

Phantom System NES deck

Manufacturer	Gradiente
Type	NES clone

- The Phantom System was the first Brazilian famiclone, released by Gradiente during the end of the 1980s, and was compatible with NES cartridges. This console can therefore be considered a clone of the NES, at least in technical aspects. Gradiente launched it at a time when Nintendo didn't show any interest in launching the NES in Brazil. Therefore, they pounced and launched the Phantom System to meet a growing demand for a community of avid gamers looking for new systems, with the market being saturated with Atari 2600 clones. The Phantom System eventually became the most popular NES clone in Brazil.

Dendy

Manufacturer	Steepler
Type	NES clone
Release date	1992

- Dendy (Russian: Денди) is a Taiwanese hardware clone of the NES, produced for the Russian market. Since no officially licensed version of the NES was ever released in the former USSR, the Dendy was easily the most popular video game console of its time in that region, and enjoyed a degree of fame roughly equivalent to that experienced by the NES/Famicom in North America and Japan. By 1994 over one million Dendy units were sold in Russia and the price was roughly $35.
- The console had its own animated Russian television commercial with the phrase "Dendy, Dendy! We love Dendy! Dendy -- everyone plays it!"

Mega Joy 2000 in 1 complete system

Manufacturer noname
Type NES clone
License nr. TN6001

- The Mega Joy 2000 is a console and controller in one. You plug the scart-lead straight into tv and of you go.
- The console can run of 4AA batteries or of a 12 volt adapter.
- The games are the usually bootleg of classic NES and FamiCom games, like Super Mario Bros., Tetris and Bomberman. The console brags about having 2000 games, but as usual, most of the games are just hacks of the same games that are already on the console.

NASA NS-90A Action Set

Manufacturer NASA
Type NES clone
License nr. NS-90A

- The console doesn't come with any cartridge included, but like almost all clones the console has a multicart built-in. In this case there's a 10.000.000 in 1 built into the console, however it only contains 14 different games, but some often not seen on a multicart, such as Major League Baseball and Sachen's Metal Fighter game.

Game Axe handheld color NES unit

Manufacturer Redant
Type NES clone
Release date 1995
License nr. FC-868

- The Game Axe was sold in Hong Kong, Taiwan, and Japan. It is a portable Famiclone that can play Famicom games, and by using the included adapter, American and European NES games.
- Due to the necessity of an extra adapter, the Game Axe suffers severe stability issues if playing NES games while holding the device. Any jarring of the hand held causes NES games to lose enough contact to freeze or shut off.

Polystation

Type NES clone

- PolyStation is the name given to many PlayStation-like NES hardware clones. The cartridge slot of these systems is located under the lid which, on a PlayStation, covers the disc drive.
- The Polystation consoles are sold under many different names, including PS-Kid, Game Player, PSMan and Play & Power; there are also a number of variations on the Polystation name, such as PolyStation II, PolyStation III and Super PolyStation. Some of these consoles resemble the original PlayStation, others the PSone redesign, and others the PlayStation 2. Recent variations of the PolyStation resemble the PlayStation 3, some of which sold under the name Funstation 3. Some variations include built-in pirated games, and in many cases these games are hacked.

Terminator 2

Manufacturer Gradiente
Type NES clone

- Terminator 2 was a video game console and a hardware clone of the Famicom.
- This particular Nintendo-clone was hugely popular in Poland, Serbia, Croatia, Bulgaria, Romania, Pakistan, India, Iran and Bosnia, where it has gained cult status, and is still widely available on auction websites and flea markets. Due to economical restraints, the fourth generation consoles such as the Mega Drive or SNES were not popular in these countries. It left a mark in pop culture and 1990s youth, establishing itself as an antonomasia for 8-bit video gaming, to the point of being more popular than the original.

Pegasus

Manufacturer Micro Genius
Type NES clone
Release date 1992

- This particular Famiclone was hugely popular in Poland, Serbia, and Bosnia, where it has gained cult status, and is still widely available on auction websites and flea markets.
- The typical retail set included the system, two detachable controllers (both with "turbo" buttons, which meant 4 buttons in total; 6-button controllers also existed.), a light gun (very similar in design to NES Zapper), power supply, RF cable, as well as audio-video RCA connectors. The system itself did not include any built-in games, but was bundled with a pirated cartridge labelled "Contra 168-in-1", which contained a few of the best-known NES titles, like Contra and Super Mario Bros.

Generation NEX

Manufacturer Messiah Entertainment, Inc.
Type NES clone
Release date 2005

- The machine is designed to play most games released for the Nintendo Famicom and its American/European equivalent, the Nintendo Entertainment System. The console takes both the Japanese Famicom 60-pin and North American/European NES 72-pin cartridges used by Nintendo.
- Patrons of the website NES Dev forums claim to have demonstrated that the NEX system incorrectly wires the cartridge port in a way that could potentially damage NES carts played in the system, as well as the system itself. There have, however, been no reports of NES carts actually being damaged by the Generation NEX.

FC Twin

Manufacturer Qishenglong
Type NES clone
Release date 2006

- The FC Twin (also known as FC X2) is a Famiclone that can play NES and SNES games. The system has been well-received due to the increasing scarcity of the original hardware.
- Similar remakes exist, both by Qi Sheng and others, such as the FC 3 Plus, RetroN 3, Retro Duo, Gen-X Dual Station, GN Twin, etc.
- The FC Twin does not always produce sounds faithfully, even with mono output; sound effects in the Super Mario Bros. series games for example will immediately seem different. Nevertheless, some later models of the console produce NES sound much more faithfully than earlier units.

Yobo Neo Fami

Type NES clone

- The system is small and light. It's available in many colors. It's top loading and features a built in 72-pin connector that services North American NES games and actually requires an adaptor to play Famicom games. The connector is high-quality, eliminating all the problems of the NES's blinking screens.
- Whereas the Japanese Neo Fami used standard 9-pin pirate controllers, the design has been changed for the 7-pin controllers that the actual NES uses! This means that if you don't like the controllers the system comes with (which feature slow-motion, just like NES Advantage, and an LCD light, for some reason) you can swap them out for any real NES controller; the standard, MAX, Power Glove, the zapper, Advantage or NES2 dogbone all work fine on the Yobo.

DuckTales Remastered Press Kit

Manufacturer	Capcom
Type	Video game
Release date	2013

- For promotion of the game, DuckTales: Remastered, Capcom sent 150, limited edition, gold NES cartridges with the original game, featuring the Remastered art as the sticker, inside a collectible lunchbox, to different members of the gaming press. Also included were recreated ads for some of Capcom’s NES games, such as Mega Man 3, a coupon for the “Green Cheese of Longevity” featured in the game and a fake ad for an upcoming cassette soundtrack from the game. All included items were padded into the box by a ground made of actual, shredded U.S. dollar bills. It was revealed in late August that Capcom was giving the remaining press kits away until the release of the game on Xbox Live, through various contests.

Display Unit (NES-M9)

Manufacturer	Nintendo
Type	Display
License nr.	M9

- The display unit comes in a plexiglass case and features all components of Nintendo Deluxe Set. The components are all non-working (dummy) product.
- A foot or a “Pedestal” was made for the M9 display and served as a base for the M9 display. The base license number is M9A.

Display Unit (NES-M36)

Manufacturer Nintendo
Type Display
License nr. M36

- Lighted World of Nintendo sign with stars
- Inside the sign a motor is running with a lighted disc, where colors animates the fiber optic lights on the front of the sign. The sign changes colors between Red and white repeating the animation effect every few seconds. The backside of the sign has a Nintendo logo and does not light up. The sign is metal framed.
- Nintendo also made a Fiberoptic Sign with multi-image design with the same license number as the first one.

Display Unit (NES-M82)

Manufacturer Nintendo
Type Demonstration Unit
License nr. M82

- The Nintendo M82 is a demonstration unit for the NES to allow customers to try games in-store before purchasing them. The full title on the machine was the M82 Game Selectable Working Product Display.
- The machine was fundamentally different from the more arcade orientated PlayChoice, because it used consumer NES cartridges instead of the latter's proprietary ROM chips.
- Nintendo also developed other in-store demonstration units; however, the M82 seems to be the common variety of these Nintendo systems.

Minnesota Lottery Modem

Manufacturer Nintendo
Type Video game accessory

- In 1988, Nintendo released a modem for its Famicom system in Japan. It didn't allow for online play; but for downloadable stuff and access to basic news and information services. The device was never released in the United States, but Nintendo figured at the time they had a entry path for the add-on: the lottery.
- Nintendo partnered with CDC (Control Data Corporation) and got the blessing of the State of Minnesota to trial a system where the NES could be used as a means for people to play the lottery from their living room.
- The complexity of the tech and political pressure made Nintendo quickly and quietly drop the plans.

Sharp Nintendo Television (19SV111)

Developer	SHARP
Type	Video game console
Release date (us)	September 1989
License nr.	19SV111

- The Television With Built-In NES (or Game Television) is the name given to two officially-licensed 19" televisions created by SHARP in 1989 - 1990 with a built-in NES known as the SHARP 19SV111 and SHARP 19SC111.
- The SHARP 19SV111 is the first television with built-in NES. These models were sold at Sears and Kmart.
- Both televisions also came with accessories. A fairly normal remote control and two individually boxed black controllers.

"nes.wikia.com"

Sharp Nintendo Television (19SC111)

Developer	SHARP
Type	Video game console
Release date (us)	January 1990
License nr.	19SC111

- The SHARP 19SC111 was the second Television With Built-In NES. This system was released after the SHARP 19SV111. This is the same system as the SHARP 19SV111, with the only exception of the sleeker design. This system is also rare because of its poor sales due to high price. This system was used as a display model in stores, like Sears, and motels and is extremely rare because it was not for sale to the public. An estimated 200 units were made, but it is unknown how many still exist because many were thrown away once the NES was outdated. In addition, no original boxes for either have surfaced.

PlayChoice-10

Distributor	Nintendo
Type	Arcade
Release date	1986
Cabinet	Standard and tabletop

- Having found success in the home console market with the NES, Nintendo developed arcade hardware to run its most popular NES games inside an arcade cabinet.
- Each machine had a different mix of games in it. Instead of a player getting to play one game until it was finished, the player got a fixed time limit to play as many PlayChoice games as they wanted to.
- Because the PlayChoice-10 outputs RGB video using a slightly different palette, games did not look exactly the same as they did on the NES.

NES Mission Control

Manufacturer Rocket Science Production
Type Video game development system

- The NES 'Mission Control' Development system was made to test game development on the NES. It seems Nintendo didn't have an official Development System in the early days of the NES, so some companies opted to build their own.
- Bill & Ted's Excellent Adventure and The Mutant Virus were developed on this system.
- The system was connected directly to a modified NES via a cable. Special RAM cartridges were created to load the game code into.

NES Test Station

Manufacturer Nintendo
Type Video game development system
Release date 1988

- The NES Test Station was a NES testing machine with the ability to test games, accessories and hook-ups.
- The device only appeared at World Of Nintendo retailers and was used by employees to test customers' Nintendo Entertainment System paraphernalia. The three main buttons on the front side of it are 'AV/RF' (green), 'Reset' (blue), and 'Power' (red) from left to right.
- The unit itself is very large, weighing almost forty pounds, and securely hooks up to the television through both AV Cables and RF Switch in one wire.

Famicom 3D System Scope

Manufacturer Nintendo
Type Video game accessory
License nr. HVC-031/HVC-032

- An advanced 3D system released for the Famicom that received video signals through two 3.5mm jacks and displayed 3-dimensional images using the liquid crystal shutter display glasses on compatible games.
- Only 7 games were compatible with the system, which included Nintendo's Famicom Disk System racing game 3D Hot Rally.
- In the U.S., compatible games were released using a standard pair of 3D glasses, which included 3D World Runner and Rad Racer, both developed by Square.

Complete NES LIST

This is, hopefully, a complete list, of every licensed games on the NES. The lists that follows are made for you to cross out the games you own. “C” means cart. “I” means the manual (info) and “B” means box. If you have Mega Man 2 with the cart and the manual, you check out “C” and “I”. This is a list thats suits the ones that just want every game, regardless of region code or variation.

US NES LIST v1.3

"http://www.neshq.com/lists/complete-nes.txt"

by: Mike Etlers

The list has many of the different variation of the realeses, but chanches are that alot is missing from this list.

The list has not taken different "Official Nintendo Seal" variations as a variation.

The different versions of the Nintendo Seal exist on almost every cartridge.

The list is made by a collection of people but mainly Mike Etlers (millert@mcs.net).

This was the most complete and pure list i could find of NES US realeses.

Canada NES LIST V3.0

"http://nationalgamedepot.zoomshare.com/files/Game_List/NGD_Text.txt"

by: Jason Smith

All Canadian games are of course games that simply have the CAN code on them. All the ones known to exist are games actually made and published by Nintendo. They aren't worth anymore than the regular USA versions, but are a cool little subset to collect. They were also all distributed by Mattel and have a Mattel logo on all the boxes so they are pretty easy to distinguish from normal USA games because of that. Many of the games come in 2 versions, one with the code, and one without the code.

5 Screw Games US NES LIST V3.0

"http://nationalgamedepot.zoomshare.com/files/Game_List/NGD_Text.txt"

by: Jason Smith

5 screw games are the original 80 or so games released by Nintendo. They all have 5 flat head screws, rather than the 3 screw security bits that all the later games have. (FYI: Nintendo and McDonalds has the patents on the security bits.) The list below includes the ones that are known for sure to exist. Also, if it says 5 screw only, that game didn't have the 3 screw releases for it, so there is only one version of that game. Also, another small note, all the games that have a 5 screw version also had a hangtab box version as well. Hangtab boxes are the ones that have a small cardboard flap that could be pulled out so retail stores could hang them on shelves to sell.

These are games that have just recently been discovered. They are Korean Versions, similar to "Hong Kong" or "Asian Version" games. Little is known about them other than that they were distributed by Hyundai. They were for play on what is called a Comboy, which is apparently the Korean NES. These are licensed by Nintendo also. The list is incomplete.

ASIAN NES LIST V3.0

"http://nationalgamedepot.zoomshare.com/files/Game_List/NGD_Text.txt"

by: Jason Smith

Asian games don't show up that often for sale, but they're not overly rare either (with the exception of a few). The Hong Kong games are in contrast, much harder to find. The Asian NES games often has a "Asian Version" text on the game cart.

NES Homebrew List

This is a small list of some of the more well-known or weird homebrew games that has a “official” cartridge. In the last few years homebrew NES games has more or less exploded into the gaming scene, with most of it originating from the NintendoAge forum.

The games often has several different releases and often sold in microscopic quantities. Ranging to less than a handfull to a few hundreds.

There is no official homebrew list, as it is hard to pinpoint what a “official” release is. The best way is to let people decide for themself what a complete homebrew set list is. Or, just have several small ones. Like a list for homebrew games released from Retrozone, etc.

Several of the games listed here are not in the book, as i went with what wikipedia considered was a complete unlicensed NES games list.

Wii Virtual Console Released Nes Games

"en.wikipedia.org (27.04.14)"

The following is a list of the 92 games available on the Virtual Console for the Wii in North America. These games can also be played on Wii U through Wii Mode.

“The wii is in my opinion the best nes emulator i have played. The sound and the graphic are in my eyes, just as the original Nintendo.”

How to disable the NES lockout chip

"<https://www.ifixit.com/Guide/Disable+Nintendo+Entertainment+System+Lockout+Chip/15677>"

Is your NES giving you the blinking red light?
Disable the lockout chip, and this will no longer be an issue.

The lockout chip was included to prevent use of pirated NES cartridges, but now some lockout chips have serious issues and may cause the system to malfunction. Disabling the lockout chip solves the problem when you have a good 72-pin connector, and it also improves the chances the game reads the first time, so it makes the NES more reliable.

The procedure given here should work for ANY old design NES (toaster model).
The new design NES doesn't have a lockout chip anyway.

2.

1• Disconnect your A/V and power cord from the NES, and flip the unit over.

2• Remove 6 screws from the bottom of the NES.

3• Remove the cover of the NES by lifting up.

4• With the cover off, remove the screws holding the motherboard and the shield for the 72-pin connector.

3.

5• With the screws holding the RF shield on for the 72-pin connector out of the console, remove 6 screws holding the cartridge sled in. The two silver screws are longer, so put those aside elsewhere.

6• Remove the cartridge sled by lifting forward till it comes out.

7• Remove 2 screws holding the motherboard in. These are by the RF modulator to remove the motherboard.

8• Remove 2 of the 3 connections to the front of the console. You do not have to disconnect the connection marked red in the picture if you do not want to since the RF shield isn't in the way of it.

9• Lift up and remove the motherboard and locate the 3193A IC. This is the lockout chip.

10• Using a Phillips #000 screwdriver or something thin, like a needle, bend the 4th pin on the lockout chip to break it and disable the lockout chip. You want to do this to the 3193A chip or 3195A IC in some of the European NES.

FuckingFuckUp

I don't know how in the hell i managed to miss these two shitass games. I must have confused them with the Wheel of Fortune series.

Anyway, i had to shove them in here at the last page, as i suck at editing books also. I didn't use automatic pagenumbers, so i had to enter them in manually. At the time of writing i am at the very last of this fucking timeconsuming monster of a project. So if i would shove them in at their original place, i would had to re-fucking-write every fucking pagenumber on the pages AND on the NES checklists. And that would have fucking destroyed my damn head.

Sorry for all the profanity but i am a little pissed at myself.
