ENCYCLOPEDIA BOOK

DaddaRuleKonge

I made this book cause` I like to catalog and categorize and catalog stuff. I made this book for myself as as a fan of the Nintendo systems. I also wanted to learn more about the system.

I have tried to make the book well presented and easy to look through. If you are happy with the book then please look at some of the web-sites on the "Reference Guide" page. Find a site that you like and give them some spending money. Or give cash to the unsung heroes of our generation; The people who translate unreleased Japanese SNES games.

If you are annoyed, or the owner of some of the content i took from you, send an email to me: sennep@hotmail.com from: Daniel aka DaddaRuleKonge

I hope you will get some use of this book, and maybe help you in your quest on collecting, or just having fun with this great system.

Similar books/PDF's in the same format are books on NES, PSX, SMS, N64, Game&Watch, NeoGeo, including several other book in the same vein, from TMNT toys to Point and Click games. http://daddarulekonge.itch.io/ DaddaRuleKonge.com

Super Nintendo Entertainment System

This is a short wikipedia introduction for the Neo Geo Systems.

The Super Nintendo Entertainment System (also known as the Super NES, SNES or Super Nintendo) is a 16-bit home video game console developed by Nintendo. In Japan, the system is called the Super Famicom (officially adopting the abbreviated name of its predecessor, the Family Computer), or SFC for short. In South Korea, it is known as the Super Comboy and was distributed by Hyundai Electronics. Although each version is essentially the same, several forms of regional lockout prevent the different versions from being compatible with one another.

To compete with the popular NES/Famicom, NEC launched the TurboGrafx-16 in 1987, and Sega followed suit with the Sega Genesis/Mega Drive in 1988. Both systems were built on 16-bit architectures and offered improved graphics and sound over the 8-bit NES. However, it took several years for Sega's system to become successful. Nintendo executives were in no rush to design a new system, but they reconsidered when they began to see their dominance in the market slipping.

Designed by Masayuki Uemura, the designer of the original Famicom, the Super Famicom was released in Japan on Wednesday, November 21, 1990 for \(\frac{1}{25}\),000 (US\(\frac{1}{2}\)10). It was an instant success; Nintendo's initial shipment of 300,000 units sold out within hours, and the resulting social disturbance led the Japanese government to ask video game manufacturers to schedule future console releases on weekends. The system's release also gained the attention of the Yakuza, leading to a decision to ship the devices at night to avoid robbery.

With the Super Famicom quickly outselling its chief rivals, Nintendo reasserted itself as the leader of the Japanese console market. Nintendo's success was partially due to its retention of most of its key third-party developers from its earlier system, including Capcom, Konami, Tecmo, Square, Koei, and Enix.

On August 23, 1991, Nintendo released the Super Nintendo Entertainment System, a redesigned version of the Super Famicom, in North America for US$199. Most of the PAL region versions of the console use the Japanese Super Famicom design, except for labeling and the length of the joypad leads. The Playtronic Super Nintendo in Brazil, although PAL, uses the North American design. Both the NES and SNES were released in Brazil in 1993 by Playtronic, a joint venture between the toy company Estrela and consumer electronics company Gradiente.

The SNES and Super Famicom launched with few games, but these games were well received in the marketplace. In Japan, only two games were initially available: Super Mario World and F-Zero. In North America, Super Mario World launched as a bundle with the console, and other launch titles include F-Zero, Pilotwings (both of which demonstrated the console's "Mode 7" pseudo-3D rendering capability), SimCity, and Gradius III.

Early concept designs for the SNES, referred to as the "Nintendo Entertainment System 2".

Console wars

The rivalry between Nintendo and Sega resulted in what has been described as one of the most notable console wars in video game history, in which Sega positioned the Genesis as the "cool" console, with more mature titles aimed at older gamers, and edgy advertisements that occasionally attacked the competition. Nintendo however, scored an early public relations advantage by securing the first console conversion of Capcom's arcade classic Street Fighter II for SNES, which took over a year to make the transition to Genesis. Despite the Genesis's head start, much larger library of games, and lower price point, the Genesis only represented an estimated 60% of the American 16-bit console market in June 1992, and neither console could maintain a definitive lead for several years. Donkey Kong Country is said to have helped establish the SNES's market prominence in the latter years of the 16-bit generation, and for a time, maintain against the PlayStation.

Changes in policy

During the NES era, Nintendo maintained exclusive control over titles released for the system—the company had to approve every game, each third-party developer could only release up to five games per year (but some third parties got around this by using different names, for example Konami's "Ultra Games" brand), those games could not be released on another console within two years, and Nintendo was the exclusive manufacturer and supplier of NES cartridges. However, competition from Sega's console brought an end to this practice; in 1991, Acclaim began releasing games for both platforms, with most of Nintendo's other licensees following suit over the next several years; Capcom (which licensed some games to Sega instead of producing them directly) and Square were the most notable holdouts.

The company continued to carefully review submitted titles, giving them scores using a 40-point scale and allocating Nintendo's marketing resources accordingly. Each region performed separate evaluations. Nintendo of America also maintained a policy that, among other things, limited the amount of violence in the games on its systems. One game, Mortal Kombat, would challenge this policy. A surprise hit in arcades in 1992, Mortal Kombat features splashes of blood and finishing moves that often depict one character dismembering the other. Because the Sega Genesis version retained the gore while the SNES version did not, it outsold the SNES version by a ratio of three or four-to-one.

Game players were not the only ones to notice the violence in this game; US Senators Herb Kohl and Joe Lieberman convened a Congressional hearing on December 9, 1993 to investigate the marketing of violent video games to children. While Nintendo took the high ground with moderate success, the hearings led to the creation of the Interactive Digital Software Association and the Entertainment Software Rating Board, and the inclusion of ratings on all video games. With these ratings in place, Nintendo decided its censorship policies were no longer needed.

32-bit era and beyond

While other companies were moving on to 32-bit systems, Rare and Nintendo proved that the SNES was still a strong contender in the market. In November 1994, Rare released Donkey Kong Country, a platform game featuring 3D models and textures pre-rendered on SGI workstations. With its detailed graphics, fluid animation and high-quality music, Donkey Kong Country rivaled the aesthetic quality of games that were being released on newer 32-bit CD-based consoles. In the last 45 days of 1994, the game sold 6.1 million units, making it the fastest-selling video game in history to that date. This game sent a message that early 32-bit systems had little to offer over the SNES, and helped make way for the more advanced consoles on the horizon.

In October 1997, Nintendo released a redesigned model of the SNES (the SNS-101 model) in North America for US$99, which included the pack-in game Super Mario World 2: Yoshi's Island. Like the earlier redesign of the NES (the NES-101 model), the new model was slimmer and lighter than its predecessor, but it lacked S-Video and RGB output, and it was among the last major SNES-related releases in the region. A similarly redesigned Super Famicom Jr. was released in Japan at around the same time.

Nintendo ceased production of the SNES in 1999, about two years after releasing Kirby's Dream Land 3 (its last first-party game for the system) on November 27, 1997, a year after releasing Frogger (its last third-party game for the system). In Japan, Nintendo continued production of the Super Famicom until September 25, 2003, and new games were produced until the year 2000, ending with the release of Metal Slader Glory Director's Cut on November 29, 2000.

Many popular SNES titles have since been ported to the Game Boy Advance, which has similar video capabilities. In 2005, Nintendo announced that SNES titles would be made available for download via the Wii and Wii U's Virtual Console service. On October 31, 2007, Nintendo of Japan announced that it would no longer repair Family Computer or Super Famicom systems due to an increasing shortage of the necessary parts.

SNES Games

This is the main portion of the book. A collection of every official Neo Geo game with a sweet cover art, a screen-shot and some information about the game.

Page Break-Down

This is a break-down of what the PSX GAMES pages consist of:

A. NTSC Cover-Art

This represent the NTSC (North American) cover art. I used GameFAQs for much of the pictures. If a cover is not present, a screen-shot is placed in it's place. That means the game did not get a NTSC release.

B. Info

This is the Info box. I used mainly wikipedia, GiantBomb and Gamefaq for help for information on the Developers and Publishers. I suspect some of the information is wrong, as often the developer credited is actually the makers of the original game, e.g. arcades, and not the one who did the home console port for example. Also, information often differ from different sources. "Mode" are what the maximum players the game support. If I did not find info on how many players a game support, I would default on 1 Player. In the info or trivia section, I wanted some content to much, and did a direct transcript, I would try to credit the source material. The credit is in italic.

C. Title Screen

This is a screenshot from the title screen of the game, found wherever. More often then not on GameFAQ or emuparadise.com.

D. Web Reviews

The review score SHOULD and MUST be taken with a grain of salt. I used the review score from "GameFAQs.com", cause` they could often be seen as fair, as they usually are reviews by several users. Though, some of the more obscure games often had few reviews, and could be seen as biased. If the site did not have a review, i would not include one, as seen on the many unlicensed games.

E. PAL Cover-Art

This represent the PAL (Europe, Oceania) cover art. I used GameFAQs for much of the pictures. If a cover is not present, a screen-shot is placed in it's place. That means the game did not get a PAL release.

E. Screen-shot

This is a random screenshot from the game. I mainly used either GameFAQ or emuparadise.

F. Rarity

The NTSC rarity are from NintendoAge, as they can be seen as one of the more reliable sources. Unfortunately, they only cover the NTSC releases on SNES. For the PAL releases I used RetroCollect. I do not know how reliable their sources are, but it was the best I found. They also miss alot of rarity scores on games. There is also some discrepancy between my score and their though, as their score goes from 1-6 (VC-ER), and mine (and NintendoAge) goes from 1-10. Here are how I set my score to their score;

1 - VC : very common

2 - C : common

5 - U: uncommon

7 - R : rare

8 - VR : very rare

10 - ER: extremely rare

The score should be used as a refrence point, and not to be taken all too literally.

G. Screen-shot

This is a random screenshot from the game. I mainly used either GameFAQ or emuparadise.

Wing Commander is the eponymous first game in Chris Roberts' science fiction space simulation franchise Wing Commander by Origin Systems.

The game was a marked departure from the standard formula, bringing space combat to a level approaching the Star Wars films. Set in the year 2654 it was characterized by Chris Roberts as "World War II in space."

More than 40 separate missions that get more complex as you progress

It's like you're the star in a deep space action-adventure movie

Wingmates like "Spirit" cover your tail as you fight the tiger-like Kilrathi

Trounce the Kilrathi and be a hero-Lose and attend your own funeral

Nothing else will have prepared you for the look and feel of Wing Commander on your Super NES.

Here's why!

Wing Commander has incredible 3-D action, fullscreen explosions, 33 super stereo soundtracks and CD game quality. But it plays on your Super Nintendo.

Wing Commander is the most extremely cool, 3-D Space Combat Simulator with more than 40 separate deep space missions that progress to near suicide dogfighting with the tiger-like Kilrathi. It's like an actionadventure movie - and you're the star!

Are you up for the challenge? This award-winning megahit is now available for the Super NES. Kick some Kilrathi butt with Wing Commander.

The 3-D Space Combat Simulator

WING COMMANDER

With all the action and adventure of the original blockbuster, Wing Commander - winner of five "Game of the Year" awards - The Secret Missions draws you into a futuristic space conflict with a new look and a new feel!

The evil Kilrathi Empire is back with a vengeance... and it's up to you to settle the score once and for all!

The amazing 3-D combat game enables players to venture into deep space and engage the enemy in fantastic realistic battles! Movie-like transition scenes, incredible scaling and new animations take gamers to new levels of excitement!

Experience sixteen new missions with unparalleled intensity, stunning new graphics and four new attack ships equipped with revolutionary weapons of massive destructive capability.

From here, the games listed are games released exclusive for the Super Famicom in Japan. Collecting for Super Famicom tend to alot cheaper than NTSC and PAL, and are often not as in demand due to importing costs and the games frequently not being in English. The Super Famicom library is giant compared to the NTSC and PAL Super Nintendo library though.

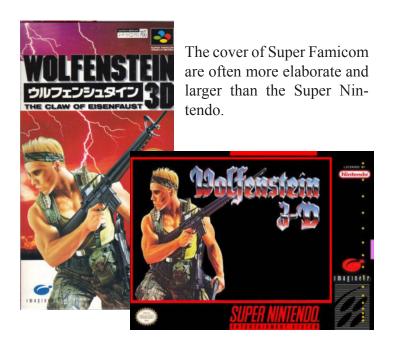

Nintendo employed several types of regional lockout, including both physical and hardware incompatibilities.

On a physical level, the cartridges are shaped differently for different regions. North American cartridges have a rectangular bottom with in-

PAL consoles face another incompatibility when playing out-of-region cartridges: the NTSC video standard specifies video at 60 Hz while PAL operates at 50 Hz, resulting in approximately 16.7% slower gameplay. Additionally, PAL's higher resolution results in letterboxing of the output image. Some commercial PAL region releases exhibit this same problem and therefore can be played in NTSC systems without issue, while others will face a 20% speedup if played in an NTSC console. To mostly correct this issue, a switch can be added to place the SNES PPU into a 60 Hz mode supported by most newer PAL televisions. Later games will detect this setting and refuse to run, requiring the switch to be thrown only after the check completes.

DeveloperWisdom TreePublisherWisdom TreeRelease date(us) 1994

Genre First-person shooter

Mode 1 Player

Super 3D Noah's Ark is an unlicensed Christian-themed video game for the SNES and MS-DOS. It was released by the biblical video game producer Wisdom Tree in 1994, and was the only commercially released SNES game in the U.S. that was not officially sanctioned by Nintendo. In order to bypass the Super Nintendo's lockout chip, Wisdom Tree devised a pass-through system similar to the Game Genie, where the player had to insert an officially licensed SNES game into the cartridge slot on top of the Super 3D Noah's Ark cartridge. Despite its name, it is unrelated to Konami's official Noah's Ark for the Nintendo Entertainment System. In January 2014, the game was re-released for the SNES, initially available only by private email.

4.8

The game that would eventually become Super 3D Noah's Ark was originally conceived as a licensed game based on the movie Hellraiser, a movie that Wisdom Tree founder Dan Lawton was a great fan of. Wisdom Tree acquired the game rights to Hellraiser for $50,000, along with a license to use the Wolfenstein 3D game engine from id Software, believing that the fast, violent action of Wolfenstein would be a good match for the mood of the film. Development initially began on the Nintendo Entertainment System, with Wisdom Tree intending to ship the game on a special cartridge that came equipped with a co-processor that could increase the system's RAM and processing speed several times over.

Eventually the Hellraiser game concept was abandoned due to several issues: The hardware of the NES was found unsuitable because of its low color palette, and the addition of a co-processor would have made the cartridge far too expensive for consumers. In addition, the management at Wisdom Tree decided that developing and publishing a horror-themed game would clash with their religious, family-friendly image. With these factors in mind, Wisdom Tree decided to let their Hellraiser license expire, transfer development to the Super Nintendo Entertainment System, and redesign the game with a Christian theme, eventually coming up with a game about Noah's Ark.

According to rumours, id Software, angered with Nintendo of America's censorship in the SNES version of Wolfenstein 3D, gave the source code for that game to Wisdom Tree as part of a kind of "revenge" for the company to make an unofficial clone to mock them. In fact, Wisdom Tree purchased the license to the engine themselves from id Software, with both Wolfenstein 3D for the SNES and Super 3D Noah's Ark being developed at the same time. The game was not a commercial success and is considered a clone of Wolfenstein 3D. It was most commonly sold in Christian bookstores.

The game plays similarly to Wolfenstein 3D, but the graphics were changed to reflect a non-violent theme. Instead of killing Nazi soldiers in a castle, the player takes the part of Noah, wandering the Ark, using a slingshot to shoot sleep-inducing food at angry attacking animals, mostly goats, in order to render them unconscious. The animals behave differently: goats, the most common enemy, will only kick Noah, while the other animals such as sheep, ostriches, antelopes and oxen will shoot spittle at him from a distance. Goats are also unable to open doors, which the other animals can do.

The gameplay is aimed at younger children. Noah's Ark includes secret passages, food, weapons and extra lives. There are secret levels, and shortcut levels as well. The player eventually comes across larger and more powerful slingshots, and flings coconuts and watermelon at the larger boss-like animals, such as Ernie the Elephant and Carl the Camel.

The game was updated for the 20th Anniversary Edition and released on itch.io on May 26, 2014 for Windows, Mac OS X, and Linux. On June 23, 2015 this version was released on Steam.

Due to the success of Donkey Kong Country, GoldenEye 007 was originally suggested as a 2D side-scrolling platformer for the Super Nintendo Entertainment System, but Martin Hollis, the director and producer of the game, proposed "a 3D shooting game" for Nintendo's indevelopment "Ultra 64" console.

FX Fighter is a video game developed by Argonaut Games and released by GTE Entertainment in 1995. It was an early realtime 3D fighting game to be developed for the PC. The game was also being developed for the SNES, but eventually only the PC CD-ROM version for MS-DOS was released.

The SNES version was previewed in GamePro #66 and Nintendo Power #69 and relied on the Super FX powered GSU-2 to deliver polygon graphics that were otherwise unattainable on the Super Nintendo. At the Winter 1995 Consumer Electronics Show, GTE Entertainment and Nintendo announced that they would be jointly developing and publishing the game. However, the project was canceled prior to release along with Star Fox 2, another Super FX 2-powered title for the system.

DeveloperHAL LaboratoryGenreRole-playingMode1 Player

Mother 3 is a 2006 role-playing video game in the Mother series, developed by Brownie Brown and HAL Laboratory and published by Nintendo for the Game Boy Advance. Mother 3 began development in 1994 as a game for the Super Famicom with Shigeru Miyamoto and Satoru Iwata as producers. The team mostly consisted of members involved in the development of EarthBound. Inspired by the Nintendo 64 launch title Super Mario 64, the development team transitioned from the Super Famicom to the newer console believing that they could also creatively flourish by making a 3D world without technical restrictions. However, their early specifications exceeded the capabilities and memory limits of the console; halfway through development the team scaled back its large scope and changed the platform to the 64DD, a Nintendo 64 expansion peripheral that was later released only in Japan in 1999. Mother 3 was expected to be a launch title for the peripheral, but development shifted back to the Nintendo 64 after the 64DD was considered a commercial failure. A demo of Mother 3 was showcased at the 1999 Nintendo Space World trade show. Shigesato Itoi announced in late August 2000 that Mother 3 was cancelled following a number of delays. Iwata and Miyamoto clarified in an interview that resources had been moved to the development of the GameCube, the next Nintendo console.

Final Fantasy VII

DeveloperSquareGenreRole-playingMode1 Player

Planning sessions for Final Fantasy VII began in 1994 after the release of Final Fantasy VI. At the time, the game was intended to be another 2D project for the Super Nintendo. Series creator Hironobu Sakaguchi originally planned for the story to take place in New York in the year 1999, and as such, the original script of Final Fantasy VII, which was written by Sakaguchi, was completely different from the finished product. Tetsuya Nomura recalled how Sakaguchi "wanted to do something like a detective story." The first part of the story involved a "hot blooded" character named "Detective Joe" who was in pursuit of the main characters, after they had blown up the city of Midgar, which had already been developed for the story. The final scenario was written by Kazushige Nojima and Yoshinori Kitase, based on the story by Sakaguchi and Nomura. Masato Kato was brought into the project later and wrote three scenes for the game.

However, several of the staff members were working in parallel on Chrono Trigger, and development for Final Fantasy VII was interrupted when the other project became significant enough to require the help of Kitase and other designers. Some of the ideas originally considered for Final Fantasy VII ultimately ended up in Chrono Trigger instead. Other ideas, such as the New York setting and the sorceress character Edea, were kept unused until the later projects Parasite Eve and Final Fantasy VIII respectively.

Development resumed in late 1995, and required the efforts of approximately 120 artists and programmers, using PowerAnimator and Softimage 3D software. It was the most expensive video game of its time, with a development budget of around US$45 million, equivalent to $67 million in 2015. Kitase was concerned the franchise might be left behind if it did not catch up to the 3D graphics being used in other games, and production began after the completion of a short, experimental tech demo called Final Fantasy SGI for Silicon Graphics' Onyx workstations. The demo featured polygon-based 3D renderings of characters from Final Fantasy VI in a real time battle. This experiment led the development team to integrate these design mechanics into Final Fantasy VII. However, as a result of the high quantity of memory storage required to implement the motion data, only the CD-ROM format would suit the project's needs. Nintendo, for whom Square had developed previous titles in the Final Fantasy series, had decided to continue to use cartridges for its upcoming Nintendo 64 console. This eventually led to a dispute that resulted in Square ending its relationship with Nintendo. Instead, they announced on January 12, 1996 that they would be developing Final Fantasy VII exclusively for Sony's PlayStation console.

Project Dream was an unreleased video game that was originally going to be released for the SNES, and later the Nintendo 64 by Rare. The game was instead entirely redeveloped as Banjo-Kazooie, which was released for the Nintendo 64 three years later. The game's initial plot was to involve around a young boy named Edison, who had caused a long term trouble with pirates led by their leader, Captain Blackeye.

Development of the game began after the release and success of Rare's SNES title, Donkey Kong Country. Tim Stamper, Rare's founder who previously directed Donkey Kong Country, took overall control of Project Dream.

One specified reason why Project Dream was not completed was that it was considered too big for the SNES version, and was later converted to the Nintendo 64 to become a large 3D role-playing game. Initially, Dream was to feature an unconventional terrain system, but performance issues on the Nintendo 64 led to the abandonment of that approach. That technical setback, along with concerns about project's overall direction, led to the transformation of the project into what became Banjo-Kazooie.

SUCCES THE CAT

Socks the Cat Rocks the Hill

DeveloperKanekoPublisherKanekoGenrePlatformerMode1 Player

Socks the Cat Rocks the Hill is an unreleased platform video game developed by Kaneko for the Super Nintendo Entertainment System and Sega Genesis. The game stars Socks, the real-life pet cat of former U.S. President Bill Clinton.

The game follows Socks as he makes his way past spies, politicians, and news media to warn the White House of a stolen nuclear missile. The game's bosses are caricatures of former Republican leaders such as Richard Nixon and George H. W. Bush. Nintendo's own censorship policies during the late 1980s and early 1990s condemned games that had "subliminal political messages" or "overt political statements".

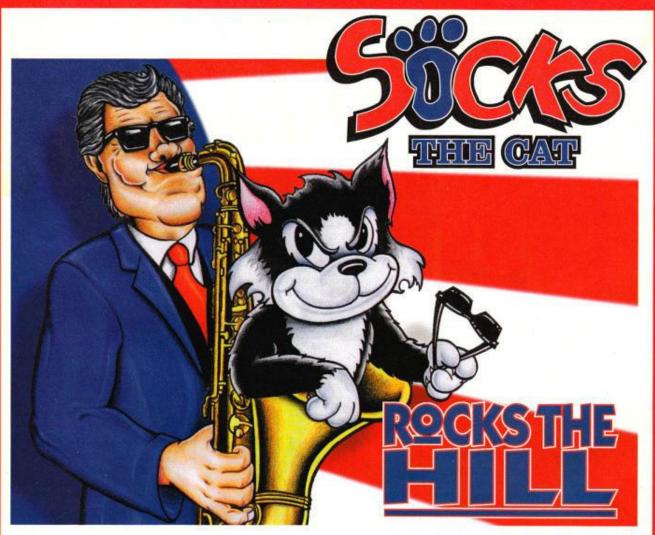

Socks the Cat was originally scheduled for a release in the fall of 1993, but was delayed until the following year. Development was eventually finished and the game was ready to be shipped to retailers, but it was canceled following the closing of publisher Kaneko's U.S. branch in July 1994. Review copies were still distributed, and multiple publications wrote reviews including Nintendo Power, GamePro, and Electronic Gaming Monthly.

A prototype cartridge of Socks the Cat found its way into the hands of private collectors. In 2011, a video was uploaded to YouTube showing gameplay from the cartridge. The game ROM remains unreleased to the public.

The game was reviewed in the June 1994 issue of Nintendo Power, which claimed the boss characters were caricatures of former political figures (including previous U.S. Presidents). It was also reviewed in the July 1994 issue of GamePro, where it was given scores of 3.0 for graphics, 2.5 for sound, 3.5 for controls, and 3.5 for fun factor (out of five possible points). Their criticisms were that the game was too easy and the graphics were flat. They did, however, like the political satire. Electronic Gaming Monthly gave it a 5.8 out of 10, calling it "a cute run-and-jump, claw the enemies game."

Call it "capital punishment," but Socks the Cat, the nation's first feline, is at play on Capital Hill. Suddenly, "political party," takes on new meaning in these two new humorous games for Genesis and SNES. "Socks Rocks the Hill," is a madcap adventure to save the world from nuclear annihilation.

Socks, the White House cat, discovers the missing portable nuclear missile launch unit in his favorite napping spot, the basement of a foreign embassy. To avoid mass destruction he must return it to the White House and alert the first family. But, a foreign spy ring has their own political agenda. They want to see Socks run, and not for political office!

The chase begins. Socks must overcome the likes of foreign spies, Enemy Animal Agents, politicians, secret service agents and the ever-present media corp. To keep the party alive, Socks pounces, tumbles and negotiates his way out of the intricate secret passages and puzzles of Washington. This cat is in a ring of trouble, but not over the hill yet! "Socks Rocks the Hill," is a one or two player 8 MEG game for Genesis and SNES. Comedic action, scrolling graphics and playful movement make this game a platform to run on, and on and on. Rock on with Kaneko USA's "Socks Rocks the Hill."

NesGlider

by: unseen64.net

DeveloperArgonaut SoftwareGenreShooterMode1 Player

Most in the gaming enthusiast community know of Star Fox; a fan favourite among the Nintendo faithful and other gamers alike. What many do not know is what lead to the circumstances of its creation, and how it all started with an independent British games developer called Argonaut Games.

Argonaut Games managed to successfully design 3D models for the NES and the Gameboy, becoming the first developers to do so. This feat attracted the attention of Nintendo, who then signed a deal with Argonaut Games to acquire their services. What they had done to pique the interest of Nintendo, Jez said "They had the Nintendo logo drop down from the top of the screen, and when it hit the middle the boot loader would check to see if it was in the right place." Nintendo had engineered their games in such a way that they would only boot if "Nintendo" dropped down to the correct place on the screen. Argonaut had modified this so that they could drop down any word, but with a resistor and a capacitor installed. This meant that Argonaut could make the game think that it had read the text and successfully boot, essentially circumventing Nintendo's copyright protection.

It is at this point that NesGlider comes in. Argonaut games had a working prototype of the game running on the NES console. NesGlider was merely a placeholder name and it came about due to the fact the game was similar to their StarGlider game and was being developed for the NES console. Argonaut Games also developed a prototype of the game for the new Nintendo hardware the SNES.

The game did really look quite rough as can be seen in a gameplay demo that can be seen online (https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=aCNt8EAIWGM), it seemed very slow and the graphics were shaky. This was because the SNES console was not primarily built with 3D games in mind. NesGlider on the SNES looked like it was not as good as the previous StarGlider game which used quick movements and looked a lot smoother. This is why Jez told Nintendo "This is as good as it's going to get unless they let us design some hardware to make the SNES better at 3D."

Nintendo whole-heartedly agreed with Jez and invested one million pounds for the new hardware to be developed. It was called the Super FX chip which was comically codenamed "MARIO" (Mathematical, Argonaut, Rotation & Input/Output) the chip would render 3D polygons that would assist the SNES in rendering 2D effects. The chip would actually be placed on the games cartridge and this allowed the SNES to finally utilize 3D graphics that may look archaic by today's standards but were groundbreaking for a console at this time.

Argonaut then gave the prototype NesGlider to Nintendo to allow them to work on it, this was a completely collaborative effort as developers from both companies worked on the game. Shigeru Miyamoto from Nintendo was made the producer for the game and he picked his own developers, artists and other people from Nintendo so that NesGlider could become a more "Nintendo" type game.

This is where the prototype did a complete "Barrel Roll", Miyamoto wanted to give NesGlider a more arcadey feel and wanted there to be more action. This is where the collaboration came in and Argonaut games gave Nintendo the idea that the player would be in a spaceship and fly to other planets instead of the way that the prototype played, which in gameplay seemed to be on Earth fighting tanks and walkers. Miyamoto also did not want the game to be considered boring and so decided that all the main characters would be animals and the reason that he chose a fox was that it was a prominent feature at a nearby shrine.

NesGlider is not a cancelled game but is purely a super early prototype for the highly regarded StarFox. If it was not for Argonaut Games and Jez San this hugely popular franchise would have not come into existence. This kind of collaboration between Nintendo and Argonaut was the main reason for the success this title deserved and with a bit of give and take between developers and publishers amazing games can be created.

Star Fox 2

Argonaut Software

PublisherNintendoGenreShooterMode1-2 Players

Star Fox 2 was to be the second of the Star Fox series and the direct sequel to Star Fox. Both Argonaut Games and Nintendo developed the game, with Nintendo planning to publish it. The Japanese version was completely finished except for minor debugging tools that weren't yet removed. It is unknown if there are any complete official English versions, though an unofficial fan translation exists. This game was scheduled to be released in the summer of 1995.

Star Fox 2 continued the battle against Emperor Andross who seeks to conquer the Lylat system, with the Star Fox team assembled once again to defeat him. The game introduces a new semi-real time gameplay system, featuring new ship types and two new Star Fox team members. It also features a more advanced 3D game engine thanks to a new improved version of the Super FX powered GSU-2.

The premise of Star Fox 2 is markedly different from its predecessor: Instead of following mostly linear paths inside predefined missions, the player moves a team of two ships freely around a map screen that represents the Lylat system. When the player's ships make contact with enemy forces, the game switches to an action perspective, piloting the Arwing ship directly with controls and game play similar to the first Star Fox. When the player clears the specified objectives, he or she is taken back to the map screen to select a new destination.

The game was extensively covered by the various gaming magazines of the time, with many screenshots provided by Nintendo to generate interest in the sequel. Since the leaking of the unfinished beta code, some individuals have managed to take and compile a large variety of screengrabs. These were taken using an emulator. Early in development, Fara Phoenix from the Star Fox comic (called "Lady" in the alpha) and the Andross look-alike "Saru" (Japanese for "monkey") were in place of Miyu and Fay. Fay replaced a female sheep character from the game's early development.

While Nintendo never disclosed the official reason for its cancellation, Star Fox 2 programmer Dylan Cuthbert shares the reasons for its cancellation: "Star Fox 2 was fully completed. I was the lead programmer and while Giles made Stunt Race FX, myself and the rest of the original Star Fox team (ie. Nintendo's artists and designers) expanded Star Fox into a full 3D shooting game. The reason for non-release was the then impending Nintendo 64 which of course was intended to be released a lot sooner than it actually was. Miyamoto-san decided he wanted to have a clean break between 3D games on the SNES and 3D games on the new superior 64-bit system. In retrospect, he could have released Star Fox 2 and there would have been over a year and a half before the N64 came out. But hindsight is always 20/20".

On the Internet, a ROM image exists of an early alpha version of the game, which came from a source code archive dating to when the game was in early development. This version features a rudimentary multiplayer mode. Another ROM, compiled from the latest known source code before the project was cancelled, can also be found—this version is nearly complete and contains minor bugs, debug code, and unfinished features, however, it lacks the multiplayer mode found in the alpha version. These ROMs can be played using a SNES emulator and can be run on real hardware if burned to a cartridge with a Super FX chip. Additionally, a fan-made patch can be added to the near-final ROM—this fixes most of the bugs, removes the debug code and the unfinished features, and translates the game's dialog into English (a version of this patch also exists without the language translation). In an interview with Nintendo Life in 2015, Dylan Cuthbert reveals he has a copy of the game's finalised ROM image, completely reviewed and debugged by Mario Club, which he acquired during the development of Star Fox Command, and states that the mastered ROM image sustains many elements that remain missing from the prototype ROM images floating on the web.

Ubi Soft decided to move the project to a CD-ROM console, and the developers hired animators from a cartoon company that considerably improved the graphics. The October 1994 issue of Electronic Gaming Monthly expected the game's release in September. It was intended to be bundled with the SNES Mouse and mouse pad and would be packaged in a large box similar to Super NES games like Mario Paint and EarthBound. Though planned for worldwide release, the release of the finished product was canceled by Nintendo for unknown reasons.

"Iwai says he is not sure exactly what happened. Because of personnel changes at Nintendo, he never received a straight answer. Iwai speculates that market challenges from the new 32-bit Sony PlayStation and Sega Saturn, coupled with the success of Nintendo's Donkey Kong Country, with its 3-D look, may have convinced Nintendo executives that they needed more action, not music." -Wired magazine

In August 2010, an exhibit titled The Man Called 'The God of Games' was shown in Harajuku in honor of Gunpei Yokoi (producer of Sound Fantasy). As part of this exhibit, Toshio Iwai hosted his own presentation called "The Genes of Gunpei Yokoi Inside of Me" where he displayed his works that had been inspired by Gunpei Yokoi: the Tenori-on musical instrument and the Sound Fantasy music game. Iwai brought the game cartridge and played it.

A prototype version of the game was leaked online in April 2015.

Sound Fantasy contains eccentric concepts and untested game mechanics. Music games, especially on home consoles, were not popular in the early 1990s, and it wouldn't be until much later in the decade that they gained mainstream attention. The Sound Fantasy prototype contains four different games in one cartridge.

Pix Quartet was inspired by Toshio Iwai's Music Insects. There are four insects of different colors, where the player can select different insect to each represent a different instrument. They crawl all over the screen, where the player can draw. Insects that crawl over a colored pixel make a note. Each color represents a different note for each insects.

Beat Hopper contains three different modes: A-type, B-type and Training. A-type is a rhythm game in the style of Q-bert, where an insect on a pogo must make every block disappear after stepping on it as many times needed. Each block makes its own sound and the order does not matter. The player can improvise a song with each block. B-type requires the player to follow a path of blocks that appears every time the player touches one. The player must make as many steps as possible without losing three lives.

Ice Sweeper is a Breakout clone with a few new twists added after a few stages, such as four bats controlled by a single player.

Star Fly is inspired by music boxes, where the player can set a sequence of stars in the sky, to compose a song. A higher star corresponds to a higher musical note. The player may set the speed and the tone.

Green Lantern is a cancelled platformer/adventure game based on the DC comic of the same name that was in development for the Super Nintendo at Ocean Software in 1994.

A small preview of the game was feature in the French publication, Super Power Magazine issue 29. Their write-up reveals that the game was a side-scrolling platformer with shooter elements. The story featured Hal Jordan's Green Lantern hunting down the queen of Xaos, who is planning to conquer the universe with an army of invisible alien soldiers, once she collects a set of all-powerful crystals.

A contributor from SNES Central was able to get in touch with some former members of Ocean to learn more about the project, as well as its demise. According to these sources, the game's original programmer was Andrew Deacin. Unsatisfied with his efforts, the company's management later replaced him with Bobby Earl, who rewrote its code from the ground up. This is just one of a number of restructuring moves made during Green Lantern's development, says John Lomax, who was an artist on the team:

"Green lantern was an interesting one as I was only on the game for the first few weeks before moving of to work on Jurassic park 2. It kinda went through development hell (new programmers coming on to finish it as the original guys were fired)."

Bobby Earl, the coder who succeeded Deacin, revealed the circumstances of the project's eventual cancellation:

"Green Lantern was a project I worked on quite a few years ago, for the Super Nintendo. The project was infact finished, but DC Comics wanted some very difficult and arduous changes to the product, thus considering the budget already spent, Ocean Software deemed it was not worth continuing with the project."

Given the apparent pressure the license holders were placing on Ocean, it is likely that they were also to some extent responsible for the changes in the team's staff throughout its development.

Dean Evans, the composer of the game's soundtrack has since come forward about his experience with the title, even releasing some of the music he created for it on YouTube. According to Evans, a number of his songs from Green Lantern were re-used in Ocean's Waterworld tie-in game.

Killer Instinct 2

Developer Rare Genre Fighting

Killer Instinct 2 is a fighting game developed by Rare, licensed by Nintendo and manufactured by Midway in 1996. A modified version of KI2 appeared on the Nintendo 64 as Killer Instinct: Gold, but a SNES version of KI2 was also developed and completed but never released.

Christopher Columbus

Developer Misawa Entertainment

Genre Shooter Mode 1 Player

Christopher Columbus (aka Xpoferens Columbus) is a cancelled shoot 'em up that was in development by Misawa Entertainment for the Super Famicom/SNES in 1992/1993. The game was loosely based on the famous italian explorer, but with a fantasy twist: his ship was able to fly and to shoot energy bullets, to take down huge mammoths, weird sea creatures and ancient dragoons. It seems that Christopher Columbus was almost complete, it was even promoted in a catalog with other Misawa Entertainment's titles from 1992/1993, but in the end the game was never released for unknown reasons.

"unseen64.net"

Thunder in Paradise

Developer Software Toolworks

Genre Action Mode 1 Player

Thunder in Paradise is a cancelled action game that was in development in 1994 for the Super Nintendo by Software Toolworks. The game was based on the TV series of the same name, starring Hulk Hogan, and it would have had at least 3 different gameplay modes, as we can see from the screenshots in the gallery below, found in EGM issue #63.

As wrote by Evan G in his article on SNES Central, it's possible that the Thunder in Paradise game was never released because the TV show was cancelled in late 1994 for quality reasons. It would have been an economic risk to complete and publish a game based on an unsuccessful TV show.

"unseen64.net"

Tarzan

Developer Manley & Associates

Genre Platformer Mode 1 Player

In 1992/1994 Manley & Associates were working on a Tarzan platform game for the Super Nintendo, that would have been published by Gametek. The project was later cancelled, as we can read from Clayton Kauzlaric's blog:

"The project was pretty close to content complete when it was canned. We had stumbled along for a good five months without any real design, apart from what the artists and programmers cobbled together on the fly. The game's cancellation may have been related to the way good ol' Tarzan methodically slaughters his way through the endangered species list over the course of the game. The fact that doing so wasn't even fun just sealed the deal".

"unseen64.net"

Environmental Detective

Developer Magicom Genre Platformer

Environmental Detective is a cancelled platform/adventure game that was in development by Magicom for the Super Nintendo and Genesis. There is scant information about the project, save for a short description in an old Mean Machine magazine. Players would have taken the role of "Ozone Kid" to solve various green-related puzzles.

The character was meant to be an environmental do-gooder who picks up trash in his home town, "Recycle City" and always takes his refuse to the recycling centre. His other numerous antics include stopping spray cans from making holes in the ozone layer and preventing the rainforest from being cut down by evil crocodiles. The general idea of the game was to inform children of environmental problems... but something went wrong during the development and Environmental Detective was never released.

Akira

DeveloperTHQGenreActionMode1 Player

Rod_Wod from the Assembler Forum has posted various scans from the cancelled Akira games (based on the manga/anime with the same name) that were meant to be released by THQ for the Genesis, Super Nintendo, Mega CD and Game Gear. Probably the screens published in the magazines were all from the same version, as the graphic looks almost the same for all the various consoles. Some more screens were found in Player One #44, Console Plus #44 and #35.

From an interview at Hardcore Gaming 101 we can read a lot of interesting info about the development of these unreleased Akira games:

"unseen64.net"

Felicia

Developer Tonkin-House Genre Role-playing

Felicia is a cancelled RPG that was in development by Tonkin House for the Super Famicom/Super Nintendo in 1995. From the few screenshots from Super Power magazine issue #28, it seems that Felicia was going to have traditional turn-based combats and a nice side-scrolling view for exploring the buildings. It's possible that Tonkin House decided to cancel Felicia to concentrate their efforts in developing new games for the PlayStation.

Casing

Super Famicom

Date 1990–1998 ID SHVC-001

All versions of the SNES are predominantly gray, although the exact shade may differ. The ABS plastic used in the casing of some older SNES and Super Famicom consoles is particularly susceptible to oxidization on exposure to air, likely due to an incorrect mixture of the stabilizing or flame retarding additives. This, along with the particularly light color of the original plastic, causes affected consoles to quickly become yellow; if the sections of the casing came from different batches of plastic, a "two-tone" effect results. The color can sometimes be restored with UV light and a hydrogen peroxide solution.

NTSC Super Nintendo

Date 1991–1997 ID SNS-001

The original North American version, designed by Nintendo of America industrial designer Lance Barr (who previously redesigned the Famicom to become the NES), has a boxy design with purple sliding switches and a dark gray eject lever. The loading bay surface is curved, both to invite interaction and to prevent food or drinks from being placed on the console and spilling as had happened with the flat surfaced NES.

PAL Super Nintendo

Date 1992–1998 ID SNSP-001

The Japanese and European versions are more rounded, with darker gray accents and buttons. The European and American versions of the SNES controllers have much longer cables compared to the Japanese Super Famicom controllers.

All versions incorporate a top-loading slot for game cartridges, although the shape of the slot differs between regions to match the different shapes of the cartridges. The card-edge connector has 62 contacts; however, many cartridges only connect to the middle 46.

NTSC Super Nintendo Model-2

Date 1997–1999 ID SNS-101

The SNS-101 model was a lighter and more compact redesign of the original SNS-001 model of the SNES. It was designed by Lance Barr, who also designed the original SNS-001, the first North American NES model and the Model NES-101 redesign. Released at a lower price point, Nintendo marketed it as an entry-level gamer's system for customers who were on a budget and who may have been put-off by the large outlay required for other more modern systems such as the Nintendo 64, Sega Saturn and PlayStation.

The SNS-101 lacks the expansion slot on the base featured on the SNS-001, making it incompatible with the Japan only Satellaview add-on or the SNES-CD prototypes. The power and reset buttons were moved to the left hand side, and it no longer has a cartridge eject button. As with the redesigned NES (NES-101) before it, the SNS-101 model has no LED power light to indicate when the unit is on (as the original NES, SNES, and N64 all included) The RF connector was also removed; however, an N64 RF modulator can be used to give the SNS-101 RF output if required.

The SNS-101 features the same "MULTI OUT" audio/video connector used on the original SNS-001 model. However, the SNS-101 only outputs composite video and stereo audio through this port, even though the original SNS-001 supported composite video, S-Video and RGB. The video encoder chip used in the system still supports S-Video and RGB, but these pins were left unused. Many users who wished for a better picture resorted to modifying the system to restore this missing functionality.

Super Famicom Jr.

Date 1998–2003 ID SHVC-101

The Super Famicom Jr. or Super Famicom Junior, often abbreviated as SFC Jr., was a redesign of the original Super Famicom video game console released by Nintendo in Japan in 1990. It was stylistically similar to the SNS-101 released in North America five months earlier. It was released in Japan on March 27, 1998 and retailed for $7800. It was manufactured until September 2003.

The Super Famicom Jr. was lighter and more compact redesign of the original Super Famicom console. It was almost identical to the SNS-101 console released in North America previously, and featured the same connections and outputs.

The Super Famicom Jr. lacks the expansion slot on the base featured on the original Super Famicom, making it incompatible with the Satellaview add-on released in Japan or the SNES-CD prototypes. As with the AV Famicom redesign before it, the Super Famicom Jr. lacks a LED power light to indicate when the unit is on (as the original NES, SNES, and N64 all included).

Differences between the North American SNS-101 include the power and reset buttons colored grey instead of purple, the different shape of the cartridge port to accommodate the rounder-edged Japanese games, and the Super Nintendo logo no longer molded into the plastic, instead having a recessed 'Super Famicom' plastic label. The "MULTI OUT" connector was also renamed "AV OUT" for the Super Famicom Jr. The Super Famicom Jr. also uses the same AC adapter as the original Super Famicom and Famicom.

The controller also retains the multi-colored buttons used on the original Super Famicom controller instead of the purple buttons used in North America. However, despite the different colored buttons it still retains the same SNS-102 model number used on the North American controller.

SNES Enhancement Chips

The list of SNES enhancement chips demonstrates the overall design plan for the SNES, whereby the console's hardware designers had made it easy to interface special coprocessor chips to the console. This standardized selection of chips was available to increase system performance and features for each game cartridge. As increasingly superior chips became available throughout the SNES's vintage market years, this strategy originally provided a cheaper and more versatile way of maintaining the system's market lifespan when compared to Nintendo's option of having included a much more expensive CPU or a more obsolete stock chipset.

As a result, various enhancement chips were integrated into the cartridges of select game titles. The presence of an enhancement chip is most often indicated by 16 additional pins on either side of the original pins, 8 to each side.

Super FX

Manufacturer Argonaut Games

The Super FX chip is a 16-bit supplemental RISC CPU developed by Argonaut Games that was included in certain game cartridges to perform functions that the main CPU can not feasibly do. It is typically programmed to act as a graphics accelerator chip that draws polygons to a frame buffer in the RAM sitting adjacent to it.

In addition to rendering polygons, the chip is also used to assist the SNES in rendering advanced 2D effects. Super Mario World 2: Yoshi's Island uses it for advanced graphics effects like sprite scaling and stretching, huge sprites that allow for boss characters to take up the whole screen, and multiple foreground and background parallax layers to give a greater illusion of depth.

This chip went through at least four revisions, first starting out as a surface mounted chip labeled "MARIO CHIP 1" (Mathematical, Argonaut, Rotation & I/O) in the earliest Star Fox cartridges, commonly called the Super FX. The final known revision is the GSU-2-SP1. All versions of the Super FX chip are functionally compatible in terms of their instruction set. The differences arise in how they are packaged, their pinout, their maximum supported ROM size, and their internal clock speed.

Variants of the Super FX chip sorted chronologically

Cx4

Manufacturer Capcom

The Cx4 chip is a math coprocessor that was used by Capcom to perform general trigonomet-chip in Mega Man X2 ric calculations for wireframe effects, sprite positioning and rotation. It is known for its role in mapping and transforming wireframes in Capcom's second and third Mega Man X series games. It is based on the Hitachi HG51B169 DSP.

DSP

This series of fixed-point digital signal processor chips allowed for fast vector-based calculations, bitmap conversions, both 2D and 3D coordinate transformations, and other functions. Four revisions of the chip exist, each physically identical but with different microcode. The DSP-1 version, including the later 1A die shrink and 1B bug fix revisions, was most often used; the DSP-2, DSP-3, and DSP-4 were used in only one title each. All of them are based on the NEC μ PD77C25 CPU.

DSP-1 chip in Pilotwings

GB-Z80

The chip inside the Super Game Boy peripheral possesses a core identical to the Z80-derived CPU in the handheld Game Boy. Because the Super NES is not powerful enough for software emulation of the Game Boy, circuitry equivalent to an entire handheld console is inside of the cartridge.

MX15001TFC

This chip was made by MegaChips exclusively for Nintendo Power cartridges for the Super Famicom. The cartridges are equipped with flash ROMs instead of mask ROMs, and were designed to hold games downloaded for a fee from specialized kiosks in Japan. The chip manages communication with the kiosks to download ROM images, and provides an initial menu to select which of the downloaded games would be played. Some titles were produced both in cartridge and download form, while others were download only.

OBC-1

OBC-1 is a sprite manipulation chip used exclusively in the Super Scope game Metal Combat: Falcon's Revenge, the sequel to Battle Clash.

S-DD1

The S-DD1 chip is an ASIC decompressor made by Nintendo for use in some SNES Game Paks. Designed to handle data compressed by ABS Lossless Entropy Algorithm, a form of arithmetic coding developed by Ricoh, its use is necessary in games where massive amounts of sprite data are compressed with a total design limit of 32-megabits. This data is decompressed dynamically by the S-DD1 and given directly to the picture processing unit.

S-DD1 chip in Star Ocean

The S-DD1 mediates between the SNES's Ricoh 5A22 CPU and the game's ROM via two buses. However, the controlling 5A22 processor may still request normal, uncompressed data from the game's ROM even if the S-DD1 is already busy with a decompression operation. This form of parallelism allows sprite data to be decompressed while other types of data are quickly passed to the main CPU.

Star Ocean and Street Fighter Alpha 2 are the only games that use this chip. Emulation of the S-DD1 initially proved to be difficult, requiring "graphics packs" to be provided for the affected titles, until the compression algorithm was identified.

S-RTC

S-RTC is a real-time clock chip used in one game, Daikaijuu Monogatari II.

SA₁

The Super Accelerator 1 (SA1) chip is used in a number of SNES games, including the popular Super Mario RPG: Legend of the Seven Stars.

Similar to the 5A22 CPU in the SNES console, the SA1 contains a processor core based on the 65C816 with several programmable timers. The SA1 does not function as a slave CPU for the 5A22; both can interrupt each other independently.

The SA1 also features a range of enhancements over the standard 65C816:

- Upgraded 10.74 MHz clock speed, up from a maximum of 3.58 MHz
- Faster RAM, including 2KBytes of internal RAM
- Memory mapping capabilities
- Limited data storage and compression
- New DMA modes such as bitmap to bit plane transfer
- Arithmetic functions (multiplication, division, and cumulative)

SPC7110

A data decompression chip designed by Epson that is used in a few games by Hudson. Tengai Makyou Zero also contains a real-time clock chip accessed via the SPC7110.

ST

The ST series of chips are used by SETA Corporation to enhance AI functionality.

ST010 was used for general functions and handling the AI of opponent cars in F1 ROC II: Race of Champions. Contains a NEC μ PD96050 CPU.

ST011 is used for AI functionality in the shogi board game Hayazashi Nidan Morita Shogi. It also uses a NEC μ PD96050.

ST018 is used for AI functionality in Hayazashi Nidan Morita Shogi 2. It is a 21.47 MHz, 32-bit ARMv3 processor.

Controllers

These pages consist of different SNES controllers, ranging from the basic controller to the more weird controllers. These controllers featured here are just a fraction of all the different controllers released for the system. The controllers featured here goes from more or less regular controllers to the weird or immersive controllers.

In that order.

SNES Controller

Manufacturer Nintendo

Release date (us) August 13, 1991

ID SNS-005

The SNES feature a controller with a more rounded dog-bone like design than that of the NES and added two more face buttons, "X" and "Y", arranging the four in a diamond formation. Another addition to the SNES controller was the "L" and "R" shoulder buttons, which have been imitated by most controllers since. This gave the controller a total of 8 buttons. The inclusion of six active buttons was influenced by the popularity of the Street Fighter arcade series, which utilized six buttons.

SNES-PAL/SFC Controller

Manufacturer Nintendo

Release date (jp) November 21, 1990

(eu) April 11, 1992

ID (jp) shvc-005 ID (eu) SNSP-005

There is a slight variation in the North American version of the controller. In the original design (used by the Japanese Super Famicom and PAL SNES) the A, B, Y and X buttons are all convex-curved and each one has a distinct color (A was red, B was yellow, X was blue, and Y was green). For the North American market, the A and B buttons were colored purple and the Y and X buttons were lavender and concave-curved. The European and American versions of the SNES controllers have much longer cables compared to the Japanese Super Famicom controllers.

Angler

Manufacturer Beeshu

Functionally identical to the ASCIIPad. It is shaped slightly different than the standard controller; the round sides on the left and right are less rounded. What is unique about this controller, is one can put a little "stick" into the center of the joypad.

asciiPad

Manufacturer Ascii ID 4920

A joypad with regular fire/turbo/auto switches for A, B, X, Y, L and R buttons, and slow motion. Slightly larger than the regular controller, but close, and the same shape, so it may feel familiar. It looks and feels well build. One drawback is that the cord is shorter than the standard SNES controller, and this can be a problem, depending on how far one play from the console.

"supermarioworld.free.fr"

Capcom Pad Soldier

Manufacturer Capcom ID CP-S01

Looking at it for the first time, it seems to be completely and impossibly unwieldy. The buttons are not on the same plane as the d-pad, being instead tilted forward on a separate platform. It looks absolutely bizarre, but it actually works. From a quality perspective this pad is top-notch. It's well built, sturdy and it feels good in the hands. Even during a frantic session the pad does not creak or twist. The buttons have a nice response, the d-pad is perfectly punchy.

Tired of getting wasted by your opposition? Imagine blowing away your video adversary (or your friends morale) with the touch of a single button!

Introducing CYBERPad. The Programmable Control Pad with Memory.

CYBERPad's CMOS Microcontroller Programming System lets you create your own deadly combinations for each game. Now you can jump, turn right, and kick with one button. You can even switch any button's function with another (including directions)! Its all your choice.

What's more, only CYBERPad has a 256-bit Memory Module that saves your programmed moves, even after your game system is turned off! For those who take no prisoners, there's also Cyber-Speed Rapid-Firing that shells out up to 27 shots per second. If things get out of control, use Slow Motion to fight your way through.

Available for both Super NES and Sega GENESIS/MEGA DRIVE

Manufacturer Honey Bee ID SF-6

The Honey Bee Competition Pro SN6 is similar size and style to the Official Controller.

Conqueror 2

Manufacturer QuickShot Release date 1993 ID QS-186

This is a joystick which definately falls into the odd category. For one, it isn't strictly a joystick; it is a little larger than the big joypads, and the joystick is much smaller. The right hand side of the stick is square, which contours upwards to the upper part of the body, which was a raised circle. The bottom right forms a "rest", where it has a special rubber pad where players rest their wrist. The circle containe the four main buttons, and five buttons around the circumference, which activated programmed moves the user puts in.

"supermarioworld.free.fr"

CyberPad

Manufacturer Suncom

The CyberPad is a programmable control pad manufactured by Suncom for the Sega Mega Drive and SNES (black for SMD and white for SNES). It has two buttons which can be set to do various programmed "moves", and as there is a built-in battery back-up system, these moves are saved when the system is switched off. There are also turbo features.

Dual Turbo

Manufacturer Akklaim

This controller is the SNES version of the popular wireless NES controller set by Acclaim. The controllers are sold 2 in a set, with a sensor that covers the front of the two SNES controller ports. The overall shape and color scheme is almost identical to the standard SNES controllers. The controllers offer the usual aftermarket controller extras, turbo and auto firing for the six regular buttons and slow motion.

"supermarioworld.free.fr"

Energiser

Manufacturer Wild Things

The Energiser is a very odd shaped pad, programmable, auto fire and slow motion.

Fighter Stick SN

Manufacturer Ascii

This joystick is similar to other "fighter" joysticks available. It offers all the features one would expect; independently adjustable turbo and auto fire for all 6 buttons, and slow motion. The controller is shaped like a square, with a half circle stuck to the left hand side. The "half circle" has the stick itself, and the "Fighter Stick" logo above it. The six buttons are in two rows of three, at a 40 degree angle. On the bottom right of the "square" body is a flatter, slightly protruded from the main body, wrist rest, also curved at a 40 degree angle to match the buttons.

"supermarioworld.free.fr"

Gamemaster

Manufacturer Triton

The controller has the usual button scheme, except the Start and Select buttons, with a "P" button, blueish green (for executing the move one program into it) to the left of the Y and B buttons. There are three buttons along the top of the joy-pad to the left; accel, repeat, and auto, all the same color as the P button, used to program a move into the joypad. It has the usual basic shape of a SNES joypad, but instead of the usual curves, they are a slightly rounded square shape.

"geocities.ws"

Invader 2

Manufacturer OuickShot

Invader 2 has the standard SNES joypad design, with independent turbo and auto fire for all 6 buttons, as well as slow motion.

Power Pad Tilt

Manufacturer Champ JS-306

The directional button is round instead of cross shaped, though the four corners on the top of the button are depressed, so as to form a cross shape on top, for a more accurate feel. This allows for true eight directional control. In additional to the usual operation of the controller, it allows for a special "tilt" control; one can hold the pad level with the ground, and rotate it left to right and front to back to move the character. It may be good for racing games, but not games where accuracy is important. It should be noted that this controller has a dual setting (slow and fast) turbo fire only, it does not have auto-fire. The shape of the controller is that of two circles, the size of one of the ends of the standard SNES controller, with a triangle with the base side up, with a smaller circle on the end of the triangle instead of coming to a peak. The start and select buttons are in the middle of the small circle, with the directional button on the circle on the left and the four main buttons (A, B, X, Y) on the right circle, in the usual fashion.

Score Master

Manufacturer Nintendo ID SNSP-026

In Europe, Nintendo made available a first-party arcade joystick called the Nintendo Score Master. The Score Master is a slightly more ergonomic and smaller arcade stick than the "The Super Advantage", with a traditional 3-over-3 button layout, similar to the traditional 6-button arcade layout. The Nintendo Score Master is somewhat difficult to find in North America, as it was only released in Europe.

"i64x.com"

SN Propad 2

The SN pro PAD 2 offers altogether eight fire keys. The function sustained fire is individually adjustable for six keys. The sustained fires status is indicated over LEDS. A Slow Motion key makes a slowing possible of the play actions down. The two Shoulder Buttons are freely programmable in your function.

"geocities.ws"

Specialized Fighter Pad

Manufacturer Ascii

The Ascii Fighter Pad was designed for use with fighting games. Note that the L and R buttons are to the right of the X and A buttons, and not on the top edge of the controller as with almost all other joypads. This has turbo/auto fire for every button, as well as slow motion.

"supermarioworld.free.fr"

The Super Advantage

Manufacturer Ascii Release date 1994

The Super Advantage was released in 1994 from Asciiware, and was the successor to the somewhat successful NES Advantage joystick originally released by Nintendo in 1987 for the Nintendo. Rather than manufacture an arcade style joystick themselves for the SNES platform, Nintendo chose to outsource the job to Asciiware in North America.

"i64x.com"

Supercon 2B

Manufacturer QuickShot ID QS-182

Aside from the somewhat different shape of this controller, and the odd select and start buttons, there is not much to note. It is a standard vanilla controller.

BatterUP

Manufacturer Sports Sciences

Release date 1994

BatterUP is a "24-inch foam-covered plastic" baseball bat-shaped controller manufactured for the personal computer, Sega Genesis, and the SNES by Sports Sciences Inc.

Games compatible with the SNES version according to instruction manual:

- Cal Ripken Jr. Baseball, 1992 Mindscape
- ESPN Baseball Tonight, 1994 Sony Imagesoft
- Hardball III, 1994 Accolade
- Ken Griffey Jr. Presents Major League Baseball, 1994 Nintendo
- Ken Griffey, Jr.'s Winning Run, 1996 Nintendo
- MLBPA Baseball, 1994 EA Sports
- Sports Illustrated: Championship Football & Baseball, 1993 Malibu Games
- Super Baseball, 1994 EA Techmo
- Super Batter Up, 1993 Namco

Barcode Battler

Manufacturer Epoch Release date 1992

The popularity of the Barcode Battler was such that in 1992, a follow-up hand-held called the Barcode Battler II) was designed to provide enhanced functionality. The BBII Interface allowed the Barcode Battler to be attached to the Famicom and Super Famicom (via an adapter) consoles similar to the way the Game Boy Player allows for interfacing of the Nintendo GameCube with the e-Reader. The functionality of the Barcode Battler II while on this connection was purely as a barcode reader and the gameplay depended purely on the game cartridge in the machine it was connected to.

Exertainment

Manufacturer Life Fitness

The Exertainment is an exercise bike that worked with the SNES. There were two games specially designed: Exertainment Mountain Bike Rally and the Exertainment Mountain Bike Rally/Speed Racer combo cart. The bike can still be purchased on various websites for about $2000 US.

The bike feature: Cable, satellite and antenna ready. Picture-in-picture monitor. Audio option of headphones or external speaker. Triathalon handlebars with built-in game controls. Pantented springless molded seat.

Specifications:

• L: 56" x W: 29" H: 64"

• Resistance: Belt

• Power Requirements: 120v 20amp

• Weight: 190lbs

Konami Justifier

Manufacturer Konami

The original versions for Sega and Nintendo's consoles were modeled after the replica revolvers used in the original arcade version of Lethal Enforcers. The gun was similar in appearance to a Colt Python. During the early 1990s, it was controversial in that it was realistic and used in equally realistic, violent video games (Lethal Enforcers). It was used as an example in the United States of America (US) congressional hearings of 1992 to 1993. The blue Justifier gun connects directly to the console. Optionally, a pink Justifier can be daisy chained into the blue gun rather for use by a second player.

Lasabirdie

Manufacturer Ricoh

The Lasabirdie was part of an interactive Golf simulation setup for the Super Famicom. It is said to be limited to only 3,500 Japanese units.

M.A.C.S. M16

Manufacturer Sculptured Software

Release date 1993

The M.A.C.S. (Mult-Purpose Arcade Combat Simulator) were designed by the U.S. Military to train soldiers in bootcamp back in the day. The lightgun consists of a lightpen attached to a M16 rifle and only worked with a specially designed game cartridge. Players would have to be about seven feet back from the T.V. for the game to actually work too.

Miracle Piano Teaching System

Manufacturer The Software Toolworks

Release date 1990

The Miracle Piano Teaching System is a MIDI keyboard/teaching tool created in 1990. The Miracle system consisted of a keyboard, connecting cables, power supply, soft foot pedals, and software on a licensed SNES cartridge. After the supplied MIDI keyboard was connected to a console and the included software was loaded, a user followed the on-screen notes.

Super NES Mouse

Manufacturer Nintendo Release date July 14, 1992

The Super NES Mouse is a peripheral originally designed for use with the game Mario Paint. It was sold in a bundle with the game and included a plastic mouse pad. Soon after its introduction, several other titles were released with the Mouse support.

Nordic Quest

Manufacturer Nordic Track

This controller is a peripheral for the Nordic Track. Players have to hook it up to their Nordic Track's computer, and the faster they ski, the faster they go. The controllers hook onto the handles of the Nordic Track. This worked for both the SNES and the Genesis.

NTT Data Pad

The NTT Data Pad is a joypad with additional numeric keypad for use with Super Famicom Modem.

Super Scope

Manufacturer Nintendo

The Super Scope, or Nintendo Scope in Europe and Australia,[1][2] is the official Super Nintendo light gun. The successor to the NES Zapper, the Super Scope was released in the European and North American markets, with a limited release in Japan due to a lack of consumer demand.

The Super Scope makes use of the scanning process used in cathode ray tube monitors, as CRTs were the only affordable TV monitors until the late 1990s. In short, the screen is drawn by a scanning electron beam that travels horizontally across each line of the screen from top to bottom. A fast photodiode will see any particular area of the screen illuminated only briefly as that point is scanned, while the human eye will see a consistent image due to persistence of vision.

Twin Tap

Manufacturer Partyroom21

Twin Tap is a two push-buttons for use with the Japanese Shijou Saikyou no Quiz Ou Ketteisen Super quiz game.

Accessories

Like every Nintendo console, the SNES also had a lot of weird accessories. These pages consist of a small sample of the more or less known SNES accessories.

Data Packs

Data Packs are Satellaview 8M Memory Packs which have data meant to be used as expansion for a Data Pack-compatible game. Data Pack-compatible game cartridges have a resemblence to the BS-X Cartridge itself. The games which were compatible with Data Packs are:

- Same Game
- Derby Stallion 96
- RPG Tsukuru 2
- Sound Novel Tsukuru
- Ongaku Tsukuru Kanaderu
- Joushou Mahjong Tenpai
- SD Gundam G-NEXT
- Shigesato Itoi no Bass Tsuri No. 1

For most of these games, Data was distributed via St.GIGA's Satellaview services. Same Game and SD Gundam G-Next had some Data Packs sold as retail in stores. RPG Tsukuru 2, Sound Novel Tsukuru and Ongaku Tsukuru Kanaderu could save user-created data to 8M Memory Packs.

``superfamicom.org"

Nintendo Power

The Nintendo Power flash RAM cartridge is a Japan-only peripheral which was produced by Nintendo for the Super Famicom and the Game Boy. The now defunct service allowed owners to download Super Famicom and Game Boy games onto a special flash memory cartridge for a lower price than that of the full cartridge.

Each cartridge's flash RAM is divided internally into eight blocks. Unless an 8-block game is loaded onto the cartridge, however, one block is reserved for the game selection menu, leaving only seven blocks for games. In addition, each cartridge has a small amount of SRAM for game saves, which is divided into sixteen blocks.

A user would first purchase the RAM cartridge itself, then bring it to a store which had a Nintendo Power copier. The player would select games to be copied to the cartridge. In addition, the store would provide the purchaser with a printed copy of the manual for the game. Game prices varied, with older titles being relatively cheap, and newer titles and Nintendo Power exclusives being more expensive.

Satellaview

Developer Nintendo Release date April 23, 1995

The Satellaview is a satellite modem peripheral for Nintendo's Super Famicom system that was released in Japan in 1995. It was developed and released by Nintendo to receive signals broadcast from satellite TV station WOWOW's satellite radio subsidiary, St.GIGA. St.GIGA was responsible for file server management, maintenance, and vocalization for "SoundLink" games. Nintendo data broadcasts were given a fixed time slot known as the Super Famicom Hour during which scrambled Satellaview-related data was streamed via radio waves to be unscrambled by St.GIGA's "BS digital hivision TV".

Every day between April 23, 1995 and June 30, 2000, St.GIGA servers broadcast material via the BS network to be received and unscrambled by subscribers to Nintendo's Satellaview service. Although St.GIGA and Nintendo worked as partners between April 1995 and April 1999, tensions between them caused a rift in April 1999 which led to Nintendo's splitting from St.GIGA as well as the end of Nintendo's support for the Satellaview system. Despite this, St.GIGA continued broadcasting alone from between April 1999 and June 2000 when it ceased support for the system as well.

Broadcast material consisted of three types of data:

- Games Original Satellaview titles as well as software versions of regular NES and SNES games were broadcast every day throughout the lifetime of St.GIGA's support for the Satellaview. Games included SoundLink as well as regular titles, and also included beta versions for upcoming titles and student works. A number of the games were additionally the basis of larger National Events in which players would compete for prizes awarded by St.GIGA.
- Magazines Digital magazines could be read on-screen, and contained information on a variety of topics such as upcoming video games, music, comedic performances, and the lives of pop idols. Like the games, broadcast magazines came in both SoundLink as well as silent formats. SoundLink magazines were performed by members of various comedic troupes such as All Night Nippon, Bakushō Mondai, Hikaru Ijūin, etc., and often featured special guests. Regular magazines included SatellaGuide, publications by Nintendo Power, comics by Lily Franky, etc.
- Data A smaller number of Satellaview titles were released as special application cartridges that possessed the basic gameplay data of the series to which they belonged, and required no downloads to play. These cartridges, however, could be swapped for the BS-X application cartridge to download specific scenarios relating to the series. As such, these cartridges functioned similarly to game-specific Nintendo Power cartridges, where the basic game was purchased separately and then expansion pack material could be downloaded via Satellaview.

The name Satellaview is a portmanteau of "Satellite" and "view". "BS" stands for Broadcast Satellite, a common name of one of the direct broadcast satellites in Japan.

Because the Satellaview was only released in Japan, there has been some confusion among English-speaking enthusiasts as to what the "BS" prefix means. As a result, a number of mistranslations have been introduced into common use today and are prevalent on English-speaking fan sites, most commonly either "Bandai Satellaview" or "Broadcast Satellaview".

StuntMaster

Manufacturer Victormaxx Release date August 20, 1993

The StuntMaster is a "virtual reality" headset created by Victormaxx for the Sega Mega Drive and Super Nintendo. It is similar to Sega's plans for their unreleased Sega VR system, though no games were designed specifically for it. It was only released in North America.

The StuntMaster is essentially a large pair of goggles with two built-in LCD screens which project the image into each eye. As no 3D effects are implemented in the headset (and no games for either console supporting 3D output), it essentially acts as a TV. It requires its own power source which is provided with the unit.

"segaretro.org"

Sufami Turbo

Manufacturer Bandai Release date 1996

This device is designed to sit on top of the Super Famicom, and features two cartridge slots. The premise behind this idea is that games could be produced at a much cheaper rate (not having to rely on Nintendo). Unlike the Aladdin Deck Enhancer, this device was officially approved by Nintendo under the provision that Bandai handle all the hardware manufacturing themselves.

The two cartridge slots are designed to share data between the games. The cartridge placed in slot 1 is the game that will be played, while the cartridge in slot 2 supplies additional data for use in the main game. Nine of the thirteen SuFami Turbo titles make use of this system.

Games that are linkable are identified by a yellow diagram showing a SuFami Turbo with either 1 or 2 cartridges in the lower right corner of the game box. If the pictures has 1 cart plugged into the SuFami Turbo, it is not linkable. If it has 2 carts plugged into the SuFami Turbo then it is linkable with the games mentioned on the box.

Of the thirteen games released, nine of them were designed with the ability to link up, but not every game can be linked with every other game. Only certain combinations exist, and those combinations only exist within series of the same game.

Super 8

Release date 1995

The Super 8 (also sold under the title Tri-star) was an unlicensed peripheral designed to allow the system to run games developed for the NES and Famicom. The Super 8 utilized an NES-on-a-chip (NOAC) integrated circuit to duplicate the functionality of the original NES hardware, and connected to the SNES's own cartridge port.

There are quite a few issues present within the system that affect gameplay. Some games aren't able to function properly when playing on the Super 8. The Start and Select buttons on the second controller do not work at all, likely a relic of the Japanese Famicom which had hard-wired controllers.

Super Game Boy

Manufacturer Nintendo Release date June 1994

The Super Game Boy is a 16-bit adapter cartridge. It was the first Game Boy-based add-on to a Nintendo console. The Super Game Boy allows game cartridges designed for use on the Game Boy to be played on a TV display using the Super Famicom/SNES controllers. It is the precursor to the Game Boy Player on the Nintendo GameCube, which functioned in a similar manner.

The Super Game Boy is compatible with the original monochrome Game Boy cartridges, Game Boy Camera, and the black Game Boy Color cartridges although it would display the latter in their monochrome compatibility mode. The unit could map the four shades of green to various colors on the screen. Later Game Boy games that were optimized to use the Super Game Boy had additional color information and could over-ride the ability to change the on-screen colors, and the ability to display a graphical border around the screen as well as the ability to display special background sprites on the screen, as seen in the Mario's Picross title screen. Those games would have printed a small "Super Game Boy Game Pak" logo on the box and cartridge. The adaptor could support up to 64 colors for the border, and 12 colors for the screen. Colorization is applied to the screen itself, and did not scroll with the background. Static screens could display all 10 colors.

The Super Game Boy actually consists of the same hardware as the Game Boy; inside the cartridge is a separate CPU that processes the games while the Super NES only provided means for user-input, output of graphics to the screen, and the additional coloring, similar to the Atari 5200 version of the Atari 2600 adapter.

The original Super Game Boy is known to play the game program and its audio 2.4% faster than other Game Boy hardware. This is due to the use of the Super NES's clock speed divided by 5, which ends up being 4.295 MHz instead of 4.194 MHz. The timing issue can be rectified by adding an appropriate crystal oscillator to the Super Game Boy and disconnecting the Super NES's clock source.

In Japan, Hori released a special Super Game Boy controller called the SGB Commander. The controller, aside from the 4 Game Boy buttons (A, B, Start and Select), also had 4 Super Game Boy specific buttons which could enable the user to mute the sound, reduce the speed of the game, change the colors and modify the display window. An additional switch is provided to alternate between Super Game Boy mode and regular Super Famicom Mode.

Manufacturer Nintendo Release date 1998

The Super Game Boy 2 was released exclusively in Japan in 1998. Additions included a link port to allow a user to access two-player mode via the link cable, the green game link LED, and the red power LED indicator. In addition, it came with eight new default borders, which replaced those in the original model (though the old borders are still accessible via a code); however, it retained the same built-in palettes and coloring tools as on the original model. This model also addressed the speed issue present on the original model. Contrary to rumors, the system is unable to run Game Boy Color-exclusive games. Also, this version of the SGB does not allow one to change borders in some games that have built-in borders. Some games have features only available through the Super Game Boy 2, such as a special Tetris DX border.

Turbo File

Manufacturer Ascii

The Turbo File devices from ASCII Corporation are external storage devices for saving game positions on various Nintendo consoles. The devices have been sold only in Japan, and they are mainly supported by ASCII's own games.

The Turbofile II was designed for the Famicom. Same as Turbofile, but contains 32 Kbytes battery-backed SRAM, divided into 4 slots of 8 Kbytes, the slots are selectable via a 4-position switch. For Super Famicom, released around 1992. Allows to connect a Turbo File or Turbo File II to Super Famicom consoles. Aside from the pin-conversion (15pin Famicom to 7pin Super Famicom controller port), the device does also contain some electronics (adding a SNES-controller ID code, and inventing a more complicated transmission protocol for entering the data transfer mode).

Voicer-kun

Manufacturer Koei

The Voicer-kun (sometimes erroneously called "Voice-kun") from Koei is an infrared transmitter/receiver for the Super Famicom that connects to the second controller port. The IR-transmitter is used for controlling Audio CD players, and is able to "learn" IR-signals from different CD Player manufacturers.

Below is a list of compatible games. The games' package included the Voicer-kun hardware, one or two Audio CDs, and a Super Famicom game cartridge.

- Angelique Voice Fantasy (1996)
- EMIT Vol. 1 Toki no Maigo (1995)
- EMIT Vol. 2 Inochigake no Tabi (1995)
- EMIT Vol. 3 Watashi ni Sayonara wo (1995)
- EMIT Value Set (Vol. 1-3) (1995)

XBAND

Manufacturer Catapult Entertainment

XBAND was an unofficial online console gaming network for SNES and Sega Genesis systems. It was produced by Catapult Entertainment, a Cupertino, California-based software company. It is the only modem released in America to have been officially licensed by Nintendo. It debuted in various areas of the United States in late 1994 and 1995. It is one of several precursors to modern online gaming networks as was eventually stabilized in the sixth and later generations of video games, such as Xbox Live, PlayStation Network, and Nintendo Network.

The client-side system worked by manipulating the game's memory in a way similar to Game Genie and third-party computer game modifications such as Multi Theft Auto.

Due to the limits of dial-up, many of the games were high in latency, and the company only improved this based on the demand of the games. For example, in January 1996, Mortal Kombat 3 for the SNES was nearly unplayable, due to the complexity and speed of the game. Although the game's playability improved over time, it still retained a large number of exploitable glitches.

Super Famicom Checklist

This is a list for the Super Famicom releases. Super Famicom had more limited editions and re-releases than the Super Nintendo. Hopefully every release is here, though, it may be incomplete. The list use the Japanese names on the games, MegaMan is RockMan, etc.
